We have also successful missions to the French Romanists of the province of Quebec; to the German population of the province of Ontario; to the rapidly-extending communities of the new province of Manitoba, and the great Northwest; to the growing settlements and aboriginal tribes of the Pacific coast; on the shores of Newfoundland; and among the genial isles of the Bermudas; and within the last two years, through God's blessing and the increased liberality of our people, we have been enabled to send two missionaries to lift up the standard of the cross among the enslaved and benighted multitudes of Japan.

For several years past there have been signs of a growing desire for an organized union of the different branches of Canadian Methodism. Practical measures have been adopted for securing this desirable object. And as the result of this movement our present General Conference, which represents over one thousand ministers and more than one hundred thousand church members, is the first meeting of representatives from three bodies, formerly known respectively as the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, the Wesleyan Methodist Church of Eastern British America, and the Methodist New Connection Church of Canada, and is composed of ministerial and lay delegates, in this respect adopting a reform which your own church was the first of the large Methodist denominations to inaugurate. And though some of the minor bodies are not yet ripe for complete organic unity, still the spirit of uniting love is rapidly melting away the icy walls of separation and sectarian exclusiveness; and we trust before long the Methodism of our Dominion will present an unbroken front to the enemies of the cross of Christ.

In these times, when an atheistic philosophy and a diluted Christianity prevail so extensively, it will doubtless gratify you to know that, though our fields of labor are widely separated, we are one with you in contending earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints; and in faithfully proclaiming, in all their divine fullness, those "glad tidings of great joy," which are now, as in the days of the here-fathers of Methodism, "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

We have appointed as our representatives to your next General Conference Rev. George Douglas, LL. D., vice president of our Conference, and Hon. Judge Wilmot, D. C. L., brethren beloved.

Our earnest and prayerful desire for you is that you may be enriched with peace and unity of spirit, and that your evangelistic labors may be crowned with abundant tokens of the divine approval and benediction. May the God of all grace "supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Signed by order and on behalf of the General Conference of the Methodist Church of Canada.

ARKANSAS CONFERENCE.

The thirty-eighth session of the Arkansas Conference commenced in the Methodist church in the city of Fort Smith, on Wednesday morning, October 28, 1874, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding.

The preachers generally were in fine health—no death in their ranks this year. They had made many heavy sacrifices, they had endured severe privations, and they had toiled day and night in the spirit of their fathers and of the divine Master; and not in vain were their labors and sufferings. Glorious and extensive revivals followed, increasing largely the membership of the church, and strengthening believers in the virtues and graces of our holy religion. Surely it has been a year of progress and triumph in things spiritual, though in things temporal there has been but little if any improvement. The preachers were meagerly supported, and the collections for missions, and for the benefit of the superannuates, and the widows and orphans of deceased brethren, were much below the standard of duty and necessity.

The proposed change in the General Rules—the rule on temperance—was presented, and the vote taken without discussion: For the change, 11; against, 17.

Members of the church, 11,928—increase, 561; local preachers, 146; deaths, 89; baptisms: adults, 1,241—infants, 515. Sunday schools, 106—increase, 16; officers and teachers, 614—increase, 113; scholars, 4,201—increase, 615; volumes in libraries, 4,256; churches, 89—value, $58,000; parsonages, 12—value, $3,050; other church property, $11,020. Moneys expended: Support of the preachers, $11,008; Sunday schools, $906.85; building and repairing churches, $5,944.33; missionary collection, $515.10; Conference collection, $251; Bishops' fund, $256.85. The amount reported by the treasurer for missions, including all items, is $830.65.

Finance.—The past year, as seen from the statistics, has been one of great privation to the ministry. Fifty-one ministers received only $10,051.11—an average salary of $206.17. The Conference collection and Bishops' fund fell far below the assessment of this year, but went slightly above the receipts of last year. The total Conference collection amounts to $245.35—an average collection from each charge of $4.81. The total of Bishops' fund is $258.80—an average collection from each charge of $5.07.

Superannuated.—John M. Bewley, Jesse Griffin.

LOS ANGELES CONFERENCE.

The Los Angeles Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South held its fifth session in the Methodist Church South in Carpenteria, commencing on Wednesday morning, October 28, 1874, Bishop George F. Pierce presiding.

W. L. Stephens was admitted on trial.

Vote on the change of the rule on temperance: Noes, 22; yeas, 2.

Members, 814; adults baptized, 31; infants baptized, 52; Sunday schools, 14; officers and teachers, 72; scholars, 458; volumes in library, 1,360; number of churches, 6—value, $8,869; parsonages, 3—value, $1,450; other church property, $9,058. Bishops' fund collected, $67.05; Conference collection, $80.35; missions, $377; other objects, $1,059.85.

The board of finance reported as follows: "The amount necessary and assessed for the Conference fund is $200. Los Angeles district, $100; Santa Barbara district, $75; Arizona district, $25."

Rev. A. Adams was re-elected corresponding editor of the Pacific Methodist.

After an address of thrilling interest the Bishop read the following appointments:

Los Angeles District.—P. O. Clayton, P. E. Los Angeles station, A. M. Campbell; Los Angeles and New River, J. W. Leach; Los Nietos station, A. Adams; El Monte circuit, G. E. Butler; Santa Ana circuit, J. E. Miller; San Bernardino circuit, M. J. Law; San Diego, to be supplied; Julian City, to be supplied (by A. B. Gill;) Wilmington, W. A. Spurlock; A. M. Campbell, president of Wilson College; S. M. Adams, principal of Los Nietos Collegiate Institute; W. A. Spurlock, agent of Wilson College; Frank E. Adams, agent of Los Nietos Collegiate Institute.

Santa Barbara District.—William Moores, P. E. Santa Barbara and Carpenteria, D. L. Cogdale; Santa Clara, J. W. Allen; Santa Maria, W. L. Stephens; San Luis Obispo, Z. A. Parker; Tehatchipi, Thomas Brewn; Weldon, F. McKean; Cambria, to be supplied.

Arizona District.—William Monk, P. E. Salt River, A. Groves; Prescott, to be supplied; Walfupi, to be supplied; Tucson, to be supplied.

I. G. Parks, transferred to the North Georgia Conference.

WHITE RIVER CONFERENCE.

We quote from the Western Methodist:

The fifth annual session began in the Methodist church, Searcy, Arkansas, November 11, Bishop Kavanaugh presiding. The attendance of the members was good, nearly all of the clerical and most of the lay being at their posts. Our lay brethren, we dare say, were, some of them, active in the committee-rooms, but we do not recall an instance in which one of them spoke a word on the floor of the Conference.

The missionary anniversary was held on Saturday night. The Rev. G. A. Dannelly, president of the Conference board, in the chair. The report of last year's operations was read by the secretary, John W. Stayton, Esq. Collections from all sources amounted to $862.50. Addresses were made by President Lewis and Dr. Redford, and were well calculated to instruct and arouse all who heard them. The collection, as was announced, was "smartly" over $300—very good under the circumstances.

Transferred.—C. H. Ellis and James R. Walkup, to the Northwest Texas Conference; J. J. Prather, to the Illinois Conference, and appointed to Clay City circuit; J. H. Boyd, to the Little Rock Conference.

Next Conference to be held at Helena.

Items from the Pacific Coast.

THE ITINERANTS.—Our office was enlivened on Wednesday, for a few minutes, by the presence of Bishop Pierce, Dr. McFerrin and Rev. M. N. Morris. They were on their route from the Los Angeles Conference. Dr. McFerrin, we are sorry to learn, had his pocket picked while coming off the steamer. How much he lost we did not hear. They left here by Thursday's train for their homes. The Bishop will next hold the South Georgia Conference, at Savannah, December 9.

SACRAMENTO.—We are informed that the present Conference year opens with improved prospects for our church in the capital city. The pastor, Rev. C. Chamberlain, is universally beloved, the congregations are increasing under his ministry, and the official board is devising liberal things. They have in contemplation a complete renovation of the interior of their house of worship. We hope that they will begin the work at once. It can be done. There are many liberal souls and some long purses in Sacramento, and doubtless many of our friends throughout the State would gladly assist in the good work.

SAN JOSE.—Our new house of worship in San Jose is fast assuming form and beauty under the skillful hands of the builders. They expect to have the basement ready for use next month. In the meantime Bro. Hopkins and his noble band of helpers are using every effort to secure the funds for its completion. They will succeed, for they have "a mind to work."

BISHOP PIERCE, homeward-bound, says the Southern Christian Advocate of November 18, passed through Macon on the night of the twelfth instant, having left San Francisco on the fifth. We did not have the pleasure of seeing the Bishop, but a friend who took tea with him at the Brown House informs us that his health has been uninterrupted during his long trip, and that he is looking remarkably well. With thousands we hail his safe return with sincere pleasure. Our readers may expect to hear something of his Western tour in a short time.

PERSONS who propose to attend the Mississippi Conference at Hazlehurst, December 16, will see a notice from Bro. Linfield on the eighth page.

Periodicals.

ST. NICHOLAS for December has a wonderfully fine supply of pictures and entertaining articles for the boys and girls. The publishers announce that the January number will be a real holiday number. It will, of course, be out in time for Christmas and the New Year.

THE National Teachers' Monthly is a new magazine published by A. S. Barnes & Co., New York. J. Mahony, late editor of the Chicago Teacher, is editor. Price, $1 per annum. The first number has been received, and promises well.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE for December is rich in the variety and excellence of its articles. The illustrations are, as usual, very numerous and fine. The Great South in this number contains notes on Kentucky and Tennessee.

OLD AND NEW for December has: A Life of Letters, The Choice, Hymen in Washington, A Chirp from a Conservative Cricket, The Protestant Episcopal Church.

FROM the following we judge that our esteemed Bro. Miller is appreciated by his people, as he deserves to be. The lines have fallen to him in pleasant places, notwithstanding his controversy with the Southern Review. Says the Central Methodist:

Our associate, Rev. C. W. Miller, who is pastor of the Scott Street church, Covington, met with a very agreeable surprise on the evening of the fifth, which was reported for the Covington department of the Cincinnati Inquirer as follows:

"Rev. C. W. Miller, pastor of the Scott Street Methodist church, was the recipient of a real surprise last night, at his residence, in the shape of a visit from forty or fifty of his flock, who brought with them a quantity of things in the way of tokens of affection and substantial helps toward keeping even with the world. It was an old-fashioned donation party, taking the reverend gentleman completely unawares, and filling up the evening's time as pleasantly as possible."

God's blessings are blessings with both his hands. In the one he gives pardon, but in the other he gives holiness; and no man can have the one unless the other.—Spurgeon.

MARRIED.

LITTLEJOHN—PUGH.—At Trinity church, on Wednesday evening, November 18, 1874, by the Rev. John F. Girault, Angus C. Littlejohn, of this city, to Miss Cynthia M., daughter of the late John T. Pugh, of Assumption parish.

PETTIT—FORBES.—At the residence of Dr William H. Watkins, in this city, November 10, by the Rev. Dr. Parker, Dr. A. Pettit to Miss Catrina Forbes, both of this city. No cards.

GUICE—STEWART.—At the residence of the bride's father, S. L. Guice, Esq., in the city of Natchez, Mississippi, on the thirtieth of September, 1874, by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Miss Stella A. Guice and Mr. James D. Stewart, of Jackson, Louisiana.

SHELTON—GREEN.—In the Methodist church at Jackson, Mississippi, November 19, 1874, by Rev. Charles B. Galloway, Mr. James Shelton and Miss Mollie Green, daughter of Thomas Green, Esq., all of Jackson.

THOMAS—ORMOND.—On the tenth of November, 1874, at the residence of Mr. Thomas Ormond, by the Rev. Alexander Hood, Mr. Oscar C. Thomas to Miss Julia F. Ormond, all of Sumter county, Alabama.

PIPES—SKIPWORTH.—At Kearhle, Louisiana, November 1, 1874, by Rev. John Pipes, Mr. M. L. Pipes to Miss Mary C. Skipworth

HAMPTON—WILSON.—On October 25, 1874, by Rev. James E. Bradley, Rev. John Hampton and Miss Martha E. Wilson, all of the vicinity of Pleasant Hill, Louisiana.

McNAMEE—FRAZIER.—November 12, 1874, at the residence of the bride's mother, by the Rev. W. Graham, Mr. J. M. McNamee, of Opelika, to Miss Kowena Frazier, of Smith's Station, Alabama.

JEWELERS.—The firm of A. B. Griswold & Co., corner of Canal and Royal streets, ranks as a first-class house, not only in New Orleans, but in the United States. So far as integrity, reliability and fairness in business through a long and successful career in our midst go to establish universal confidence, we may say that their claims are second to none anywhere, and it is with pleasure that we refer our readers to their advertisement in our columns.

FAMILY GROCERIES.—In passing up and down Magazine street our attention has been repeatedly attracted by the handsome and well-arranged store on the corner of Magazine and Jackson streets, kept by Messrs. Delgado & Goldthwaite. There is a freshness in the appearance of things, indicating attention to business, and the variety of their stock shows a studious attention to the necessities of their customers. See their advertisement.

KID GLOVES.—One of the objects of attraction now on Canal street is the glove depot of Messrs. Gueble & Nippert, at No. 131, the center of the Touro building. Those who want neatly-fitting and good gloves can undoubtedly be gratified from the superb stock at this old and reliable depot.

STEAMBOAT DRUG STORE.—Mr. J. P. Hayes, No. 21 Canal street, advertises, in another column, his drug store, which is most conveniently located for steamboats lying in the river above or below the Canal street ferry. He makes the supplying of this class of customers a specialty.

NOTARIAL business of all kinds, the execution of deeds, passports, etc., will be attended to promptly by William H. Seymour, notary public and commissioner of deeds for Texas Illinois, Mississippi and other States, No. 79 Customhouse street, New Orleans.

PAYNE, KENNEDY & Co., cotton factors, 61 and 66 Baronne street, are experienced factors, and we feel safe in saying that they may be relied upon as a safe and honorable firm, who will do the best that they can with the business intrusted to them.

MANY thanks to subscribers for the prompt attention which they have given to our accounts. We are greatly needing the money due us, and are glad to know that those we have served appreciate our call. A few complaints have reached us of errors in accounts, but they are very few in proportion to the large number of statements sent. They are minde, too, in good temper, and in a spirit of kindness which is very gratifying to the publisher, and they will be patiently investigated by the book-keepers. Those who have settled—notwithstanding the impression that there was an error—are assured that errors are subject to correction at any time, and if they have overpaid it will be refunded when discovered.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publishor of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

FLOUR.—We have received from Mr. J. W. Platt, corner of Camp and Poydras streets, a sample barrel of the flour which he advertises in another column, and can say that we have rarely if ever seen it surpassed in quality. Mr. Platt keeps good and fresh groceries.

AIKEN & WATT, COTTON FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS.—In noticing, two weeks ago, the excellent firm above named, we were in error in stating that they remained at their old stand. Their present location is No. 46 Union street. See card on seventh page.

BUCK'S BRILLIANT STOVE, sold by H. Haller, at 49 Camp street, has given entire satisfaction, as far as we know or have heard. We have never used any other, and simply say it is good enough, and we take pleasure in calling attention to his advertisement elsewhere.

READ the advertisement of Dr. Wurrington's medical preparations.

PEOPLE wishing for a first-rate article in the line of yeast powders are referred to the advertisement of our brother, Rev. P. M. Goodwyn. They have been in use at our house for some time, and have proved eminently satisfactory. We know of others who use them and are pleased with them. Mr. Goodwyn is well known to many of our readers, and they will be glad, we doubt not, to give him their orders.

UPHOLSTERERS.—We do not think our readers can find a house with which they can deal to greater advantage in the lines of upholsterers' goods, window shades, wall paper, cornices, mirrors, frames, moldings, screens, etc., than that of Messrs. Heath & Lara, No 99 Camp street, whose advertisement appears in our columns today.

PITTSBURG COAL, OAK, ASH AND PINE WOOD.—Mr. H. H. Hussman, No. 102 Calliope street, between Magazine and Constance, invites attention, in another column, to his large supply of the above articles, which it is so important to secure at once in view of the approaching winter.

MESSRS. BRASELMAN & ADAMS, 586 and 588 Magazine street, prepay freight on all orders over $10 sent direct to their house with the money. See advertisement.

OPTICIAN.—Any one in need of the services of a reliable optician would do well to call on Mr. Bohne, No. 1 Carondelet street.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

The Child's Corner.

OUR MENAGERIE.

BY JOSEPHINE COLLARD.

We've got a whole menagerie
At our house, I declare;
For yonder comes a little chap
As hungry as a bear!
And I have heard the youngster say,
When on an errand sent;
"I'm just as tired as a dog!"
And doggedly he went.

It is but seldom that he cries,
I'm willing to confess,
And seldom would you care to hear
His signals of distress.
For, like the "mighty monarch," who
In forest loves to reign,
This auberat of ours will roar
With all his might and main!

As sly as any fox is he
When mischief is about,
As innocent as any lamb
When you would find him out;
And when correction's rod, perchance,
You'd have the urchin feel,
He wrigs es out of wisdom's ways,
As slippery as an eel.

But there are days when order reigns
Supreme within the house;
No doors are banged—the child appears
As quiet as a mouse;
Till of a sudden through the bars
Of silence he will bolt,
And scamper up and down the street
Like any other colt!

We never know just how or when Occurs the change we see;
Now he is slower than a snail,
And then a busy bee:
But when a whole menagerie
We're anxious to enjoy,
We open wide the outer door,
And introduce that boy!

Newton's Absent-Mindedness.

Sir Isaac Newton was called a very absent-minded man—that is to say, he forgot common things because he was thinking so keenly and constantly of uncommon things. They tell a story of his table being served one day with a nice broiled chicken; but he forgot his dinner hour, and forgot it for so long a time that a friend came in and ate up his chicken. Presently after Sir Isaac came bustling in, and, seeing the remnants of the dinner, exclaimed: "How stupid of me! I quite forgot that I had dined!"

On another day, when he went out for an airing, he got off his horse at the bottom of a high hill, to lead him up. When he reached the top, and would have mounted again, he found he had only the bridle in his hand! The horse had slipped his head-gear quietly and trotted home. This was stupid; but if you can think as steadily as Sir Isaac Newton thought, you can afford to be stupid at times.

Sir Isaac was never married, and always possessed a calm and unruffled temper. (I declare solemnly to the elderly people who read this that I joined the above two statements in one sentence by sheerest accident.)

An incident in the life of Sir Isaac Newton that is often spoken of illustrates his mild temper. His dog Diamond, which was a great favorite with him, and had the privilege of his library, one day overset a candle among his most valued papers, and, before rescue could be made, they were utterly burned. "Oh, Diamond! Diamond!" said Sir Isaac; "thou little knowest the mischief thou hast done!"

I must confess that it seems to me rather a tough story. I know a great many goodish sort of people who, in such a strait, would have used a different word from "Diamond," and repented it the next day.

There were enemies of Sir Isaac Newton who said he had lost his mind by reason of this mishap; if he did lose it, he found another, for he died with a good solid one at over eighty.

It is true that he made no great discoveries in the late years of his life; indeed he almost ceased to be known as a philosopher, and was for a long period a quiet officeholder under government in London. In our time, you know, officeholders are said not to favor discoveries; but Sir Isaac had nothing to conceal. He was attached to no rings but the rings of Saturn.

As I said, he was a bachelor; and, living modestly, he grew rich. He was kindly and charitable throughout his life, and left his personal fortune to a niece (the daughter of a half sister,) who had been for a long time the mistress of his London home. His landed property, which was inherited, and which included the old stone farm-house where the philosopher was born, fell into the hands of a Robert Newton, eldest son of a cousin, who was a worthless, dissolute fellow, who squandered his inheritance, and who, in a drunken fit, fell while smoking his pipe, and was choked by a portion of the pipe stem.

If you ever go to London, and into Westminster Abbey, you will see an elaborate tomb in honor of Sir Isaac Newton, against the choir screen, to the north of the entrance; but in the rooms of the Royal Society you will find what is better worth seeing—that is, the first telescope that Newton made, and also the old dial which, in 1844, was brought away from the walls of his early home in Lincolnshire; and, last of all, a lock of his silver hair.—St. Nicholas.

An Anecdote About Immersion.

The children of the Sabbath school in —— were in the habit of attending, at a different hour, a neighboring school where the doctrine of immersion, as the only mode of Christian baptism, was very zealously taught. Under these instructions some of the little ones had become very much interested in the subject. They had been told that Philip and the eunuch went "down into the water, and came up out of it," that Christ was "baptized in Jordan," and "came up out of the water," and that all this meant immersion. Some of the children had become quite converts to the doctrine, and showed much opposition when the subject was controverted. On one occasion, when the pastor was saying that going into the water did not necessarily mean going under it, a bright little girl became quite excited, and exclaimed aloud: "O yes it does; Christ went down into the water, and that means that he was immersed. Grandma says it does, and my other teacher says it does, and Mr. —— says it does, and I know it does, and you can't be baptized unless you follow Christ and be immersed as he was," and the little thing shook all over with excitement.

Well, said the pastor, I will tell the school a story, and then you can judge for yourselves whether "going down into the water" means going under it. I was riding down on the bank of the river the other day, and I met a little boy with a very short fishing rod and wet feet, coming up the bank. I said to him: "Well, my son, where have you been?" looking at his wet feet. "I have been down in the river, sir." "No," said I, "you haven't." "Yes," said he, "I have; my pole was short, and I waded into the water to get my hook into that deep hole." I looked at his wet feet, laid my hand on his shoulder, and felt his hair. "No," said I, "you haven't been into the water." Looking me full in the face, he said: "Yes, sir, I have." "No," said I, "your coat is dry, your hair is dry; you cannot have been in the water." Looking at me for a moment, with a sort of contemptuous air, he said: "Old man, don't you know the difference between going into the water, and going under it?"

Some people, it seems, do not. What little boy or girl that pulls off shoes and stockings, and wades into the water's edge to gather pebbles or water lilies, but knows it? St. Luke did, and never said that Christ and the eunuch were immersed. That has been left for others in more modern times to discover.—Union Work.

Where's John?

"Where's John?" thought the old cow, as she put her head out of the window at the back of her stall in the barn. "The sun is an hour high, and I am so hungry that I am chewing the straw of my bed. I wish John would come! I want my breakfast. Moo-oo-oo!"

"Sure enough, where's John?" thought the old white hen. "It is time for John to come with the meal for me and my chicks. Just hear them cry! They want their breakfast. Cluck, cluck, cluck!"

"Cock-a-doodle-do! That will rouse him, I guess," thought the old fighting cock. "Cock-a-doodle-do! Come along, John! you are wanted. The cow wants her breakfast; the hen and her little chicks want theirs; so do the ducks, the turkeys and the doves. And I want mine. Cock-a-doodle-do!"

"Gobble-gobble-gobble! I do wish John would come!" thought the old turkey. "I have been off my roost more than two hours; and the ground is so dry that worms are scarce. Why doesn't he come? Gobble-gobble-gobble!"

"Coo-oo-oo! I, too, am hungry," thought the dove. "Some crumbs and seed and corn, if you please, John! Here we are all waiting. Coo-oo-oo!"

"Quack, quack! Will that boy never come with our breakfast?" thought the two old ducks, who were waiting with the rest. "We want to go and swim in the pond; but we must have our breakfast first. Quack, quack!"

And so they all waited and waited. But it was almost seven o'clock before John came and unlocked the barn-door. What had been the matter? I will tell you; but let me whisper it in your ear, for John feels a little mortified about it. You must know, then, that John, instead of jumping out of bed at once when he woke, turned over and went to sleep again; and when he woke the second time the sun was high, and he saw he had been very remiss. He will not do so again. The best way is to jump out of bed at once.—The Nursery.

EARNING MONEY FOR THE CONTRIBUTION BOX.—When a collection was to be made in a Sabbath school, some time since, it was proposed that each child who gave should inclose his money in a slip of paper, telling in what manner it had been earned; and having been much interested in reading these little scrolls ourselves, we thought it would be as pleasant to others to see some of the many ways in which the little folks can make pennies for themselves, so as to have something to give to missions without calling upon their parents.

On one of these papers we find: "Ten cents for reading to mother." On another: "I earned this money by whitewashing our new springhouse." On a third: "Ten cents for making bread and keeping house." On a fourth: "I earned this by taking care of Sister Maud." On a fifth: "For keeping mother's room in order." A sixth has: "Twenty cents for improvement in music." A seventh: "Ten cents for not crying when I fell down the steps." An eighth: "For carrying a telegram to the office." A ninth had: "Made twenty cents by doing what she was told without asking why." A tenth had been: "Keeping mother's yard in order." An eleventh had: "Earned five cents by waiting on grandma;" and so on for a great many more.—Sunday School Advocate.

THE RIVER AND THE CANAL.—There was a beautiful river; but the river was very discontented, and made even of its beauty a source of discontent. It had a sore grievance.

There was a canal which, for a long way, went almost side by side with the river, and at such a little distance from it that on placid evenings, when even the fluttering of winged insects makes a gentle noise of joy, the river and the canal could hear one another speaking.

"This straight, hideous thing," exclaimed the river, "why do men forsake me for it, stealing the water from me to feed its frightfulness!"

"I may be hideous," replied the canal, "and I certainly am straight; but then you see I am always of the same depth, whereas you brawl along, in a shallow way, over the stones here; while at the further reach you are deep enough to drown a giant. Now men, and they are not to be blamed for it, like what is of even depth and always serviceable."

The river murmured to itself something about its unrecognized beauty and merit; but did not make any distinct reply to the canal, for it could not.—By the Author of Friends in Council.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Oats as Horse-Feed.

It is a very general belief among our people that for horses or mules required to do farm work no food is as nutritive as corn, and that it is impossible "to keep up the stock" on any other kind of grain. This is a great mistake, however. I am satisfied, from a long and careful experience in the management of draft animals, that good, sound oats are by far the most nourishing and wholesome food for either horses or mules on a plantation, for the reason that they are more easy of digestion, are less liable to sour, and are more easily assimilated than corn in any shape. For instance, I never saw a mule or horse fed on good, clean oats troubled with colic or flatulency. I alludo only to good, clean oats. It they are musty or moldy they are the worst possible food, and will produce the worst result; but if they are sound, and about four or five months old, I am positive that no other food is as good, or possesses the combination of healthful and nutritive qualities as they do, no matter what the work which the animals are required to do.

A horse or mule doing very hard work may be allowed to eat as much as he will without injury. He should have just a little good hay or fodder in addition. For an animal doing light work a less quantity may be given, and good condition will be kept up if they are ground coarsely and mixed with chopped food, and sprinkled with a little salt and water.

Corn is the most expensive stock food that we can possibly use. Oats are cheapest and most easily raised. Even were corn as wholesome food as oats, the latter are preferable in an economical point of view. But were the cost of both equal, I should prefer the oats as the more conducive to the health and serviceability of the stock.—Farm and Home.

EFFECT OF TEMPERATURE ON THE CREAMING OF MILK.—The result of a series of experiments, carried on through several months, by exposing different portions of milk in pans to temperatures of 40°, 57° and 74°, and determining the amount of fatty matter still present after various times of exposure, are embodied in a report by Schubert, from which it appears that the separation of fatty matter from the milk was most rapid at 40°, but that it was more rapid at 54° than at 57°, the separation being more complete at 40° in eighteen hours than it was at 57° after thirty hours. After twenty-four hours at 40° only 0.296 per cent. of the fatty matter remained in the milk, and while diminution of it continued up to 30 and 36 hours, it was so slight as to have no practical importance. Tests made on a large scale of Schwartz's method of immersing the milk in deep vessels in ice-water showed that it produced the largest yield of butter for equal measures of milk, and also that sweet cream afforded more butter than sour cream. The method possesses the additional advantage that the milk never sours, and can be preserved days in the ice-water without the least injury, and will bear transportation to a considerable distance before becoming warm enough to change. Cheese made from it is so much better, and less liable to spoil in keeping; and since butter made from the sweet cream contains less milk, sugar and casein, according to the analysis made, it is consequently less liable to become rancid.—New York Tribune.

HINTS ABOUT MILKING.—Always manage to have the cow eating when she is being milked, for when thus occupied she lets down her milk freer, and is less liable to kick and move about than when she can give her whole attention to the milker. It is best to milk diagonal teats at the same time, but always take of the off teat first, for if the cow is going to kick at all, she will kick from the side you commence to milk. In milking diagonal teats the left hand milks a third teat, and thus the left hand serves as a fender in case she kicks or steps about. The best stool is made by nailing a foot-square piece of pine board on a piece of 4x4 one foot long. The knees are the most convenient bucket-holder. Get close under the cow; work the bucket well under the udder, and the milk will not be near so apt to be spilled as when you put the bucket on the floor and sit as far off as possible. Milk quickly, steadily, gently, and never leave a cow until you have her last drop. Above all things, never yell at her or beat her. Kindness is a cow's most effective master.

WHEN THE COWS COME HOME.—Many of our farmers have wasted years of valuable time just because they did not teach their cows to come home at night. And one who has lived or traveled in the country will remember the familiar Cobos! Cobos! of the farmer's son or hired man as he endeavors to coax the cows from the great pasture. We have had a little experience in these matters, and well remember how many times we have waded through the brush and bogs looking for the cows, and, boy-like, we thought them dreadfully contrary animals. But we have lived long enough to learn better, and now think the biped the more contrary animal of the two.

Boys, we will tell you a secret that will save you a great deal of trouble, and it is this: Every time the cows are driven up at night or in the morning, give them a good lick of meal or bran, and for it the cows will always be on hand at the milking-time.—American Stock Journal.

RENOVATING BITTERS!!

STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Scientific.

M. LADIGUIN has recently invented a new plan for electric illumination, which is quite simple, and which, it is believed, may be advantageously used for lighting mines, as there is no danger of its causing the explosions incident to such localities. It consists in a bit of charcoal or other poor conductor attached to a wire communicating with a magneto-electric machine. The charcoal is inclosed in a glass tube in which the air is replaced by a gas which will not combine with the carbon when the same is brought to a high temperature. The tube is sealed, and the machine set in motion by a small steam engine or other motor, when the charcoal gradually becomes incandescent, emitting a pleasant and quite brilliant light, the intensity of which, it is said, may be graduated at will.

THE ORIGIN OF GUANO.—About thirty years ago the great traveler, Humboldt, reported that the Peruvians used in their agricultural operations a remarkable substance called guano, which had fertilizing properties of an extraordinary character. He examined the locality where the matter was found, and pronounced it the dung of sea-birds, which made their breeding and roosting-places there. At the Chincha Islands he found the deposits to be over sixty feet in thickness, and, observing how thin a deposit was made every year, he calculated that it must have taken many thousands of years to furnish the whole mass. As no rain falls on the islands the excrements cannot wash away; a total absence of rain was therefore necessary to Humboldt's theory. It is remarkable how one after another the scientific explanations of our great men come to be set aside. For years no one disputed Humboldt's idea—it was so plausible—and yet the great time required to establish the whole deposit was always a stumbling-block to weak minds. But at length it was discovered that guano existed on the islands all along the Pacific coast, in many of which there was no great abundance of sea-birds, and on some of which, as in those off the coast of Lower California, rain often fell heavily. Thus Humboldt's theory of the sources of guano was fairly open to doubt. The result has been that the Chincha Island deposits have been examined by scientific men. While there is no doubt about some of the upper surfaces of these deposits being the excrements of birds, the lower, and indeed comparatively the whole, is found to be a geological formation. That which owes its origin to birds is, of course, one thick mass, without order or arrangement; but the lower and larger portion is stratified, or in horizontal layers, like rock in a sandstone quarry, and of course required the action of water to give it that form. It has now been ascertained that there existed along the Pacific slope small organisms, which were neither animal nor vegetable, but which a learned German author calls "protistæ," and which, dying, formed these layers at the bottom of the waters. The bed of the Pacific is undergoing gradual and often, in the case of volcanic islands, pretty rapid upheaval, and thus the beds of phosphatic guano are formed by the throwing up above the level of the water the beds of dead protiste which existed hundreds of years ago. This places the origin of guano in a more comprehendable light. What we call the ammoniated guanos are, in all probability, the excrements and remains of animals, while the phosphatic guanos are of marine origin, and a very different substance. Travelers, even so acute as Humboldt, are often deceived by the reports or the language of the strange people among whom they explore, and in this case Humboldt probably mistook the derivation of the word "guano." It does not, as is generally supposed, mean bird manure, but any kind of fertilizer. It is properly written in the Peruvian language "whurnno," and is derived from the verb to grow. Whatever makes plants grow is guano. It seems to have been in use for a very long period by the inhabitants of districts in which it is found. Dr. Edwards, of the New York Lyceum of Natural History, has given the subject of guano history much study, and finds it referred to in an old Peruvian book published two hundred years ago.—Philadelphia Press.

PUTTING OUT THE GOOSE.—During the singing of the first psalm in the parish church of Birsay, some years ago, a goose entered and quietly "waddled" up the passage toward the pulpit just as the preentor had got out of the tune and almost come to a standstill—a not very unusual occurrence at that time. The minister, observing the goose, leaned over the pulpit, and, addressing the church officer, said: "R., put out the goose." That functionary, not observing the presence of the feathered parishioner, and supposing that the minister's direction had reference to the precentor, marched up to that individual, and, to the no small amusement of the meager congregation, collared him, saying at the same time: "Come out o' that, follow."

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Mississippi river and bayous	11 994
Red river	2,178
Railroads	5,022
Lake	97
Mobile	3,542
Texas	485
Total	24,119

On Saturday the market opened with an active demand and at full prices, and 2,500 bales changed hands during the morning at about previous rates, good staple kinds commanding a fraction over outside rates, but about noon buyers operated with less spirit, and in order to effect sales factors were compelled to occasionally make a slight concession. The entire sales summed up 5,150 bales. On Monday the movement commenced with a fair inquiry and rather more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, which checked operations, but, finding buyers would not go on unless at Saturday's figures, the former subsequently offered their stocks more freely, and the sales up to twelve M. reached 2,000 bales, after which the demand was slack, and for the rest of the day the advantage was on the side of the buyers, except for good staple kinds, which, being scarce and in request, maintained their previous firmness. The entire sales embraced 4,581 bales. On Tuesday the sales during the morning were confined to barely 2,000 bales, after which buyers and sellers came together more freely, and 5,800 bales changed hands, making the entire business of the day 7,800 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity. Mixed lots, short staple descriptions and the poorer qualities were irregular and easier while even grades low middling and the higher grades exhibited increased firmness, and good staple kinds continued to command about ⅛c. above the outside figures of our quotations.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,450 bales, against 17,250 for the corresponding time last week and 15,000 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 282,438 bales, against 220,928 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 258,827 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 13,458 bales to Great Britain, of 18,917 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 26,781 to France. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1874. NO. 49.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, Nov 25.—In response to the telegram from Tuscumbia, Mayor Cobb has received a number of contributions for the sufferers, which will be forwarded at once. The numerous accounts of suffering in the South and West have elicited very general expressions of sympathy hereabouts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 27.—The steamship McGregor arrived last night from Australia and Honolulu. The King of Hawaii is on his way here in the United States steamer Benecia. Before his departure from the Sandwich Islands he reconstructed his cabinet. He also appointed Prince Delewhawka as regent during his absence in the United States. The prince has also been proclaimed as successor to the throne.

John Norton, chief mate of the whaler James Allen, with Alexander Collins, Thomas Baker, John Seyran, Carlos Ambler and Charles Beyer, seamen, went in a boat from the vessel and struck a whale. The line got foul and they were drawn down and all perished.

The cutter Lapwlug, with a crew of four white men and several native sailors, while on the passage from New Caledonia, stopped at the Island of Santa Cruz for provisions. The savages massacred her captain, officers and all the crew but one—a native sailor. No names are given.

POTTSVILLE, Nov. 27.—The oversupply of coal throws out of employment fifteen thousand workmen in this region. Suffering during the severe months is apprehended.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 29.—About six thousand people witnessed the debarkation of the King of Hawaii. To-day the flags of the shipping and of most of the public offices were displayed. The King was brought from the Benecia in the commander's yacht, on the arrival of which salutes were fired by the war vessels in the harbor and the city guard at the pier.

NEW YORK, November 30.—Mayor Havemeyer died suddenly to-day, aged seventy years. The sudden death of Mr. Jonathan Sturges, a particular friend of the mayor, made a deep impression on him, and it is said he made melancholy remarks both yesterday and to-day of the uncertainties of life. The mayor walked three miles against a strong wind.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—Two hundred and forty-two Mennonites arrived on the steamboat Nederland, and are at present quartered in the steamship depot at Christian street wharf. They are in charge of the Menaonite Executive Aid Society, and will be forwarded to a safe harbor in Lancaster county, where they will be sheltered in about a hundred houses belonging to the Phœnix Iron Company. There they will remain during the winter, and in the meantime locations for a settlement will be selected in the Western States.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, via Havana, Nov. 17.—A majority of the Legislatures of the States of the Mexican republic have approved of the establishment of a Senate chamber. They have also approved of other constitutional reforms, which are to be declared integral parts of the constitution, commencing September 16, 1875.

PARIS, Nov. 26.—A frightful disaster occurred on the Great St. Bernard road. The travelers were overwhelmed by an avalanche and eleven people were lost.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 29.—The religious excitement growing out of the conflict between the Catholic clergy and the civil authorities has culminated in serious disturbances in the provinces of Pernambuco and Parahiba. Sympathizers with the Bishops of Para and Pernambuco, who were recently sentenced for violation of the laws of the empire, have made riotous demonstrations. Their cry is: "Down with Masons;" and they have attacked several Masonic lodges and bid defiance to the local authorities. Troops and ships have been dispatched to the disturbed district from Pernambuco, Bahia and this city.

THE premier of England is not alone in believing that the next great European war will be a religious one. At the great public meeting at Geneva, making up an audience of three thousand, held at the close of the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations, at which were present distinguished statesmen from most of the countries of Europe, representing Protestantism of all shades, from Calvinism down to Rationalism, Catholicism, both Roman and Reformed, and Judaism, a short speech was delivered by Prof. Holzendorff, of Munich. At first, says a correspondent of the Observer, his reception was a little cold, and by his sharp distinctions, which seemed designed to cover the action of Germany toward France, he failed to put himself en rapport with his audience. But when he made the point that the great peril of Europe now is civil war instigated by the church, that the last war of Switzerland was brought on her by the Jesuits, and that society must teach the church the lesson of peace on earth and good will to men, he struck a note that roused the assembly to an almost frantic burst of bravos. The manner in which the sentiments of the Austrian professor were received shows that this belief in the impending peril from popery is a general one, from the highest statesmen to the common people.—Watchman and Reflector.

From the Work.

HAVANA CT., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As we have just closed our sixth and last protracted meeting for this season, I will give you and the readers of the ADVOCATE a short review of the aggregate results. From the first to the last there has been a remarkable display of the power and willingness of God to convict and convert sinners, and to renew and sanctify believers in Christ. In the church there has been a general rallying among all hands to the standard of the cross. Never have I seen brethren more prompt to duty. Earnest prayers and faithful labors in the altar, in the woods, on the roadside, at home, have been common by many unaccustomed heretofore to public service. The holy fires of heavenly love have been kindled anew in many hearts long since cold and almost dead. Most of the membership are pledged to seek, and seek until they obtain, that holiness of heart without which no man can see God in peace. Conversions and reclamations have been numerous. Sixty-four adults and twenty-two infants have been baptized, and one hundred and six received into the church. I would not be surprised if the Lord of the harvest should gather some new recruits for the ministry among the young men brought in during these meetings. The brethren who have aided us have our warmest thanks. "Now unto him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church, by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen." G. HAWKINS.

NOVEMBER 17, 1874.

MCCOMB CITY MISSION, SUMMIT DIST., MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our mission has been successful. A large number have been converted and added to the church recently; the members animated and encouraged; Sabbath schools at nearly all our preaching-places; prayer meetings, experience meetings and class meetings very useful to the building up of the church of Christ.

Our camp meeting at McComb City commenced October 14 and continued about twenty days. Some sixty conversions were reported, and a large addition of members. Suitable committees were nominated and elected, by a rising vote of the whole camp meeting congregation, to locate two camp grounds—one near Tanglpahoa, the other on the northern part of Summit district, in the vicinity of McComb City, to be permanent property of the church. A camp meeting association was organized to see to the camp meeting interest, and to complete the locations by the month of June next. The camp mode of worship is popular with all of us up here. About twelve ministers were in attendnuce a part of the time.

Summit district has been more blessed with revival power, Bible holiness and church additions this year than in many years before. Our worthy presiding elder, A. B. Nicholson, has the whole church machinery well lubricated and at work, displaying the wisdom of the counell and Bishop in putting the proper man in such a field of work.

Bro. Church, of the Northern Church, has greatly aided in building up our holy Zion. He is a revivalist indeed—a scientific singer, a superb preacher, and skillful in management. He is beloved wherever he goes. Bro. Harmon, of your city, preached for us with power. Bro. Johnson, president of Whitworth College, was with us. Eternity will disclose the result of his powerful sermons. He excelled himself. Bros. Wesley, Sandell, New, Bowen, H. P. Lewis, Elijah Tarver and others did great and lasting work. Our few Northern Methodists at McComb City worked in harmony with us.

The DeSoto House, said to be the finest and best-kept hotel in this State, was the home of the preachers, the generous congregation paying one-half of the fare, and Bro. Buckley, the hotel-keeper, franking the rest.

Thus we reach those artisans and railroad men of high intellect, persistence and worth, who generally make jewels in the church of Jesus when converted, securing the safety of the road and travelling community.

McComb City is nearly three years old. It is owned by the Mississippi Valley Company, said to be worth $100,000,000. It is already worthy of General McComb, whose name it bears. All hands work up to time (ten hours per day,) thus teaching the country the value of time—when to begin and when to stop, as far as the giant whistle can send the signal.

In the beginning of my mission I could find but one member of the Church South, who soon moved away. Now we have many. We must hold every position, and our efforts must keep pace with the railroad villages and cities, and with the growth of the improvements and the march of knowledge; and then we will be strong and rich, and be able to extend our power, dividing the missionary fields with our noble evangelical sister churches, and see "a nation born in a day, the heather given to the Son of God for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the world for his possession." Thy kingdom come.

Yours in Christ,

E. R. STRICKLAND, Pastor.

VIRGINIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South convened in its eightieth session, in the very neat and tasteful church in Elizabeth City, on Wednesday morning, November 18, at half-past nine o'clock.

Bishop E. M. Marvin was present and conducted religious services.

Bishop Marvin visits the Virginia Conference for the first time, but his reputation for zeal and earnestness has preceded him.

The editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, writing on the fourth day of the session, says:

The reports, so far as we have heard, will be better than last year. This, we are glad to know, will be the case with the missionary collection.

It is a matter of devout thanksgiving to God that during the past year we have not lost a member by death. We do not remember that this has been the case for many years. For one year of our history as a Conference we have no committee on memoirs.

Vote on the temperance rule: Yeas, 55; nays, 91.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

The thirty-fifth session of the Memphis Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South began in the Methodist church, Humboldt, Tennessee, on Wednesday morning, November 18, 1874, Bishop Paine in the chair.

The number of local preachers and members in the several circuits, stations and missions of the Conference is as follows: Local preachers, 278; members, 31,749—increase, 1,830; adult baptisms, 2,917; infant baptisms, 930; Sunday schools, 294; teachers, 2,127; scholars, 15,004; collected for missions, $3,089.60.

It was resolved to take the vote on the proposed substitute for the specification on temperance in the General Rules viva voce. The secretary called the roll, and the vote was as follows: For the substitute, ayes, clerical, 47, lay, 16, making 63; noes, clerical, 36, lay, 10, making 46.

Transferred to the Pacific Conference.—W. J. Mahon, and stationed at San Francisco; H. B. Avery, and presiding elder on the Visalia district; T. A. Atkinson, and stationed on Visalia circuit; R. E. Sawrie, and stationed on Millville circuit; W. D. Senter, and stationed on Merced City circuit.

Knights Templar.

NINETEENTH TRIENNIAL SESSION OF THE GRAND ENCAMPMENT.

Large numbers of Knights still continue to come in from day to day, many in commanderies, and others individually and by themselves. Among the larger delegations that arrived yesterday were Ivanhoe, of St. Louis, about 30 Sir Knights; Chicago, No. 19, 20 Sir Knights; Muskegan, No. 22, Michigan, 20 Sir Knights; La Porte, No. 12; Columbia, No. 2, Washington, District of Columbia; Grice, No. 16, Norfolk, Virginia, and Stevenson, No. 8, Staunton, Virginia.

The Grand Commandery of Pennsylvania, that arrived early on Monday morning, is the largest commandery that has yet arrived, consisting of considerably over one hundred and twenty Knights from every portion of that State.

The display of the Knights Templar in conducting the officers of the Grand Encampment of the United States to their asylum, the Masonic Hall, where the deliberations of the Grand Council will be held, was a novel sight to New Orleans. To all processions seers it presented so many advantages over ordinary processions that it could not fail to draw everybody out. The commanderies are so well drilled that their marching, shifting and changing is a sight in itself. This may explain why so many persons, ladies and children, turned out to witness what was only a preliminary of the grand procession of Friday.

The streets through which the procession marched were all well decorated with flags and wreaths, and the Templars were welcomed at every house they passed.—Picayune, December 2.

A CARD.—Mr. Editor: You will please publish this card. In an interview with Dr. Taylor I have learned that he did think, in the article over the signature of "Preacher," in the ADVOCATE of October 15, that I assailed his veracity. I hereby disclaim any such intention.

PREACHER.

FOLKLAND, ALA., Nov. 24, 1874.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—The class for examination on the first year's course of study will please meet the committee at Hazlehurst, on Tuesday morning, December 15, 1874, at nine o'clock.

Chairman of Ex. Committee.

COMMENTARY ON THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. By Thomas O. Summers, D. D. Nashville, Tennessee: Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 1874.

The volume is a large duodecimo of 411 pages. Facing the title-page is a beautifully-executed map, illustrative of the Acts and the remaining books of the New Testament. The work is dedicated to Bishop Marvin. Our examination of Dr. Summers' Commentary on the Acts leads us to the conclusion that it is in every respect of equal merit with those which have been issued on the Gospels. The hard places have not been skipped, and the easy ones have received no needless elaboration. The editor makes no useless display of learning, but gives the sense of the passage in terse and compact form. There are evidences of abundant erudition, of critical acumen and research, and of a sound judgment. The latest results of biblical scholarship, of history, discovery and science, so far as they throw new light upon the sacred text, are brought into service. While this commentary may not of itself answer all the demands of the student and preacher, it will prove eminently helpful, and the ordinary reader, the Sabbath school teacher and the family will find it adequate and well adapted to their wants. A commentary like this, late and fresh, and abreast with the thought and attainments of the day, and written from the standpoint of Methodist theology, is an invaluable blessing to our people. Summers' Commentaries take their place among the standard works of our church, and they are worthy of a place in every library and in every household. We can have no intelligent piety without a thorough study of the Scriptures, and such aids as this commentary affords are most essential to all who would get the richest treasures out of the storehouse of inspired truth.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW AND INFANT BAPTISM. By Rev. C. W. Miller, A. M.

This is a stout duodecimo pamphlet of 81 pages, published at our Publishing House in Nashville, and written in answer to Dr. Bledsoe's article in the July number of the Southern Review. As yet we have not had time to give to Mr. Miller's rejoinder the careful perusal which such a work demands, nor do we feel competent to decide on the merits of a controversy waged by such eminent and able controversialists. The style of the author is clear and strong, and the temper, we are glad to see, is uniformly good. Eschewing offensive personalities, he deals with the question in dispute, and exhibits skill, research and candor in the investigation. We commend the pamphlet to our readers as eminently readable and instructive. It is, of course, but fair and just that those who have read Dr. Bledsoe's article should obtain this able reply to our great reviewer.

STAR OF OUR LORD, OR CHRIST JESUS, KING OF ALL WORLDS, BOTH OF TIME OR SPACE. With thoughts on inspiration, and the astronomic doubt as to Christianity. By Francis W. Upham. New York: Nelson & Phillips; Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden, 1874.

The work of Mr. Upham on "The Wise Men—Who They Were, How They Came to Jerusalem," has been before the public for some time, and has excited much interest, and has been received with great favor by thoughtful readers. The present volume is intimately related to the former, and while of independent interest, is better read in connection with it. The author has opened a rich vein of truth in connection with the visit of the magi and their guiding star, and has amplified his subject with great originality and power. Some of his speculations and some of his conclusions may not command our entire approbation or assent, but we have found this volume, as well as the one which preceded, most delightful and edifying. The pleasure of their perusal is worth ten times their cost.

THE CLASS-LEADER—HIS WORK, AND HOW TO DO IT. With illustrations of principles, needs, methods and results. By John Atkinson, A. M. New York: Nelson & Phillips; Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

A 12mo of 338 pages, on good paper, and handsomely bound in cloth. The author is a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and pretty well and favorably known as the author of "The Garden of Sorrows, or the Ministry of Tears." The work is well written, and the topics introduced and discussed are those of most importance to the class-leader and his work. The history and character of the class meeting are exhibited, and the institution is strongly vindicated. We welcome the book with gladness, and heartily commend it to our readers. It is calculated to promote the most vital interests of the church.

RUNNING TO WASTE. The story of a tomboy. By George M. Baker. Illustrated. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham, 1875.

A queer title for an excellent story. A good judge pronounces it one of the best. Reading the first chapter gives us a strong desire to go through the book.

TALKS WITH GIRLS. By Augusta Larned. New York: Nelson & Phillips; Cincinnati: Hitchcock & Walden.

This is a first-rate book from beginning to end, characterized by good sense, and written in a vigorous and pleasing style. Girls in their teens should read it by all means, and for that matter all ladies will find it a profitable book. As it is written by a lady, they may be better disposed to take the good advice and valuable suggestions which it contains.

THE Southern Review for October has been on our table for some time, and as yet we have not found time to read it through. As far as we have gone it is capital, and from a general sampling of its articles we are favorably impressed with their uniform ability and value. The Idea of God, by the editor, is satisfactory to us, and will be suggestive and instructive to all. Action and Passion is a most powerful treatment of the necessitarian's view of the will, and is a compact and conclusive refutation of President Day, and the celebrated work of Jonathan Edwards. The Missionary Prince revives a subject which excited much attention a quarter of a century ago. It will be read and read again with unflagging interest. The Notices of Books are more at length than usual, and make one of the best articles of this very superior number of the Review. Contents: 1. The Idea of God; 2. Physiological Aspects of Human Nature; 3. Of Action and Passion; 4. The Opposition Under George the Third; 5. Home Life in Germany; 6. The Principle of Revolutions Inherent in Governments; 7. The Missionary Prince; 8. The Song of the Swallow; 9. Chopin; 10. Prof. Tyndall; 11. Notices of Books.

PREACHING—MANNER AND MATTER—an address by Rev. John Hall, D. D., is in pamphlet form, and published by Nelson & Phillips, Methodist Book Concern, New York. The address was delivered before the Drew Theological Seminary, and is a production of more than usual merit. We wish all of our preachers, old and young, would read it. It is the practical advice of one of the best preachers in the world.

MR. GEORGE T. CURTIS, says the New York Independent, one of the ablest lawyers of this city, in his letter addressed to the Democratic glorification meeting, held some weeks ago, calls in question the constitutional validity of many of the laws now on the statute book of the nation, and suggests that it will be one of the duties of a Democratic Congress to institute a searching inquiry into laws which he designates as "a usurpation of powers never granted to the Federal government." Precisely what and how much he means by this statement we do not know. But if he alludes to the so-called enforcement acts, then we entirely agree with him that no small part of this legislation lacks the fundamental element of constitutional validity. Its great fallacy consists in assuming that the recent amendments, by imposing limitations upon the powers of the States and authorizing Congress to enforce the same, have made it competent for Congress to enact a body of laws for the protection of person and property against individual trespasses, that have no reference to the action of the States or its official agents, and that have always been recognized as falling under State jurisdiction. All the enforcement acts, with the exception of the civil rights bill of April 9, 1866, are thoroughly permeated with this legal fallacy. They have been made worse than they otherwise would have been by the blundering manner of their administration, under the direction of Attorney General Williams. The consequence has been an actual usurpation of State functions by Federal power. Justice Bradley, of the Supreme Court, and Judge Ballard, of the United States Circuit Court in Kentucky, have recently declared a portion of these acts to be unconstitutional, and we are utterly at a loss to see how any impartial judge can come to any other conclusion, after having carefully compared them, section by section, with the amendments themselves. Had the supplementary civil rights bill become a law, it would have capped the climax. The principle at the bottom of that bill, and of much previous legislation, needs only to be carried out to absorb in the powers of Congress all the functions of the State governments. The principle is radically false, and all laws based upon it need repealing.

Rev. N. M. Skipworth.

Whereas, Our beloved brother and presiding elder, N. M. Skipworth has, in the providence of God and the appointing power of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, been transferred to a distant field of labor; And whereas, His labor with us has greatly endeared him to us; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the members of the North Bossier Quarterly Conference, do sincerely regret his departure, which deprives us of so valuable a minister and friend.

Resolved, That we together do ask God's especial care and blessing upon him and his family, and do most kindly recommend him to the Conference and people whither he goes.

Resolved, That we request that the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will please publish the above.

Signed in behalf of the Quarterly Conference. W. R. PRATHER.
ROBERT RANDLE.

THE GERMAN WATCHMAN'S SONG.

Hark! ye neighbors, and hear me tell—
Ten now strikes on the belfry bell!
Ten are the holy Commandments given
To man below from God in heaven.

CHORUS.

Human watch from harm can't ward us;
God will watch and God will guard us;
He, through his eternal might,
Grant us all a blessed night.

Hark! ye neighbors, and hear me tell—
Eleven sounds on the belfry bell!
Eleven apostles, of holy mind,
Taught the gospel to mankind.

Human watch, etc.

Hark! ye neighbors, and hear me tell—
Twelve resounds from the belfry bell!
Twelve disciples to Jesus came,
Who suffered rebuke for their Savior's name.

Human watch, etc.

Hark! ye neighbors, and hear me tell—
One has pealed from the belfry bell!
One God above, one Lord indeed,
Who bears us forth in the hour of need.

Human watch, etc.

Hark! ye neighbors, and hear me tell—
Two resounds from the belfry bell!
Two paths before mankind are free;
Neighbor, choose the best for thee.

Human watch, etc.

Hark! ye neighbors, and hear me tell—
Three now sounds on the belfry bell!
Three-fold reigns the heavenly host—
Father, Son and Holy Ghost.

Conference Skimmers.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of November 12 there is an article with the above title. Its author bears down upon his victims with a heavy hand. He appears to feel that he has discovered a prodigious evil in the church, and that he is commissioned to expose and put it down; and he seems to congratulate himself on account of the felicitous manner in which his great task has been performed. He reminds me of a lad whom I knew when at school. My hero was aspiring. No ordinary place in the juvenile games in which he took part could satisfy him. When "feats of skill and sleight of hand went round" among his classmates he was ever ready for the post of honor. This having been conceded him, his face glowed with youthful fire, his voice rang out in the merry laugh, and his whole nature seemed to be upon the summit of boyish bliss. But when the coveted position was conferred upon another his countenance became cloudy, the tones of his voice sank into a deep bass, and in his estimation the whole game was erroneously played. Do such boys, Mr. Editor, grow to be men? If they do, without a miracle of grace they will be bright and happy as the wheel of fortune rises with them, but will grow morose and bitter upon the downward turn. And if any of them should become itinerant Methodist preachers, as they change from "the fat to the lean" in their Master's work, will they not be tempted to feel and write as does this critic concerning "Conference skimmers?" After all, is "anybody hurt" by this missile of our friend in cog., or is it one of those shots which wounds more in the recoil than by the discharge? For one, Mr. Editor, I am inclined to answer this question in the affirmative. Are not these "Conference skimmers" mythological characters? And has not our critic taken aim and emptied his piece at "men of straw?" If there are such ministers as he describes, it is sincerely hoped, for the honor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, that they "are few and far between." But if it could be demonstrated that there are "Conference skimmers" here and there, even then would not the article of our good friend be an error philosophically? Is there not a non causa pro causa in it? In the collisions of feelings and interests that are of daily occurrence, many effects are attributed to causes with which they have little or no connection. This is often done where the bias of personal interest is wanting. The acorn, whose germ develops into the oak, is not the cause of the stately tree, but the divine will-force which called into being the first acorn-bearing tree. Events transpiring around us have their causes more remote than we frequently suppose. For example, the motives of these "Conference skimmers," that are unhesitatingly attributed to selfishness by our critic, may have another and quite a different origin. Toward the close of the year, while the presiding elder is gathering up information to be utilized in stationing the preachers at the ensuing Conference, the stewards and people, who often assist the eyes and ears of the presiding elders and Bishops, quietly whisper these significant and potent words into the ears of one of these officials: "We desire a change;" and then comes along, after Conference, one of these "Conference skimmers," who takes the place so reluctantly relinquished by his predecessor. Now all this is natural, and in scores and hundreds of instances it is right. The people have the right to designate the intellectual and moral character of the man by whom they are to be served, and it is the duty of the chief pastors to act upon the information thus obtained. The cause of removal in every such case is far back in the hungry, perishing souls of a people who are tired of "stale bread," and whose spiritual appetite craves the rich and luscious provisions which God in the gospel has provided for his earthly children. Because these removed brethren were treated with kindness and courtesy for their office' sake, should they leap to the illogical conclusion that they were desired longer? Such a course would often lead to the gravest mistakes. The testimony of the presiding elder, and the private letters handed the Bishop in the cabinet when the appointments were made, would, if opened to the aggrieved brother's inspection, make quite a different impression.

This criticism of Alabama seems to contain an error in religion. It teaches—indirectly, at least—that success in the gospel ministry depends, to a large extent, upon securing at an early period the highest places in the church. These once obtained, the fame and fortune of the young ecclesiastic are made. Is this position really true? So far from it is the truth in the case that a high place in a rich city church, with an intelligent audience, is indeed the most dangerous position which a man of small attainments and little experience could possibly occupy. Such a place is a heavy burden to a man of the greatest resources. Jonah felt this perhaps when his ministerial field was to include Nineveh; and even Moses, the most gifted and educated Hebrew of his age, felt the responsibility and danger so greatly, when called to preach to Pharaoh and his court, that he hesitated, feared and trembled before he entered upon his work. When our Lord saw "the scribes and Pharisees" taking the chief seats at feasts and in the synagogues, he rebuked these "skimmers" of his day, and taught that a course diametrically the opposite is the true road to success. The man who is invited from a low to a higher seat is the honored guest in the house of his host, and the preferred disciple in the church of his Lord. When the two disciples—James and John—petitioned Christ that they might "sit the one on his right hand and the other on his left in his glory," he refused them—informed them that these positions would be bestowed upon them "for whom they were prepared," and then taught the whole twelve that humility leads to success in his kingdom. His words to them were: "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever of you will be the chiefest shall be servant of all." The true Christian feeling was evinced by Moses when he was informed that Eldad and Medad prophesied: "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them."

This criticism misrepresents our whole Methodistic economy. The fair inference to be drawn from it is that a few aspiring and selfish preachers intrigue and maneuver themselves into the best appointments in all the Conferences which are near them, while the modest and humble, the truly good and great preachers in these Conferences are in comparative neglect and obscurity. Is there not in this, Mr. Editor, an implied complaint against our general superintendents more serious, if possible, than that which is urged directly against "Conference skimmers" themselves? Is it possible that our Bishops are so weak, and such poor judges of human nature, that they are duped from year to year by these shallow, heartless and pretentious city preachers? No, indeed. Our Bishops, in a vast majority of cases, know all the facts as they are, and our great and good men are in places suited to their capacities. These chief pastors see and hear not only through their own, but also through the eyes and ears of the presiding elders and people, and they are thoroughly posted before the appointments are made at the Annual Conferences. These wise and laborious superintendents do not often overlook a man who is as great in the command of an army as he is in executing the duties of a private soldier. With them, as with all other true men, "knowledge is power," and goodness also is power; and he who possesses these can never long be overlooked or forgotten. Where the people have any voice in reference to the character of the man who shall serve them, preachers who have these will ever be in demand. No "Conference skimmers," with all the "sugar-sticks" and "ladies," will ever be able to displace men of this mold. Such men may begin life at the lowest grade of pastoral work, but, despite all opposition, they will rise to the first ecclesiastical positions in the church. Chalmers and Spurgeon, I believe, began as obscure country preachers, and by genius, energy, faith and integrity they rose, in the maturity of their manhood, to the first pulpits of their age and country. When Bishop McKendree preached the great sermon in the city of Baltimore, which designated him as a fit companion and colleague for the laborious and faithful Asbury, he was dressed in the homely jeans spun and woven by the mothers and sisters in Israel "in the far West," to whom he had ministered in holy things. O, Mr. Editor, that we could all throw away jealousy and littleness of every character, live and labor in peace and love, and through all our toils sing:

"If we dare to obey thy laws,
E'en servile labors shine;
Hallow'd is toil, if this the cause,
The meanest work divine!"

By such a cause we would husband all our resources, preserve "the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," and save ourselves from the opprobrium which ministerial weakness, in unguarded hours, has occasionally heaped upon us in Alabama.

REPLY TO MR. DOWLING.

MR. EDITOR: After an absence from home for some weeks, on my return my attention was called to a communication in the ADVOCATE of November 5, 1874, over the signature of Angus Dowling, in which my name is pretty freely used. I most respectfully request that this short reply be inserted in your very popular and widely-circulating paper, promising not to trouble you any more on this subject. Rev. Mr. Dowling is no "one-horse, pine-woods preacher," but is ex-presiding elder of the Marianna district of the Alabama Conference of "the Methodist Episcopal Church South," if I mistake not. This distinguished gentleman charges that on the second Sabbath in October, 1874, at Pleasant Ridge church, the Rev. P. M. Callaway took occasion to make an "onslaught" upon the Methodist Church, because of her doctrine and practice. "Onslaught!" Well, really, I was unconscious of having done any such big work as that; but I do know, and doubtless there are hundreds of others who heard what I said on that occasion, who would testify that I made no "onslaught," or statement even, without giving my authority, not in verbal statements of my own, or repeated from others from memory, but read from the books themselves; for I am not ignorant of the fact, which has long since been proverbial, "that no Baptist minister ever was reported correctly upon a doctrinal subject, when such report had passed through two or three hands before reaching the reporter." But to return to the "onslaught." I have searched in vain to find a single allegation in the reverend gentleman's communication on that subject, or one scintilla of proof or argument to sustain such a charge; but off he flies at a tangent, and alleges that I "asserted in substance that John the Baptist organized the first Baptist Church," etc. Well, I frankly confess, if that was the substance of my little sermon referred to, it must be a dead match to his communication in reference to it; for if there is substance or gum in it (the communication,) I have not the penetration to find it.

Now what surprises me is that the reverend gentleman would call upon a man for information whom he supposed was so profoundly ignorant as to make such an assertion as that in a sermon in the presence of assembled thousands. So far from making such statement, I have not the remotest idea that there is a Baptist preacher in the United States, Missionary or Anti-Missionary, white man or negro, who can read the New Testament, and has sense enough to put two English sentences together, who ever believed, or expressed any such thing, either in words or substance, as that John the Baptist founded the present Missionary Church, or that he ever presumed to organize a church at all, although he certainly had as much right and was as well qualified to do so as any other John—John Wesley not excepted.

So you see, Mr. Editor, that the ears of the gentleman or the ears of his informant being at fault, the long list of interrogations, learned, spicy, witty, full, with all their ponderous weight, upon the devoted head of the gigantic man of straw of his own manufacture. So erudite as it may be, it has no "substance," point or force, so far as I am concerned.

The second section or paragraph of the learned gentleman's article certainly does evince great research and much historical information, etc., not to say a magnificent array of hard names; indeed, when he gets to writing about the "chain" he is almost logical. If his conclusion had a premise to correspond the argument would be truly overwhelming, which is not the fact, however.

But what about the Methodist chain of succession? They are the people that I am charged as having made an "onslaught" upon. Well, if I have taken the dimensions of the right chain, which I concede to be adroitly linked, and of massive proportions, it is too short by nearly eighteen hundred years to hook on John the Baptist, Christ or his apostles. But perhaps by this time the gentleman wishes to know what I did say, which he ought to have known before he began this controversy, it occurs to me; but evidently he did not.

I asserted then, and repeat now, that John's ministry, both his preaching and baptism, belong to the gospel dispensation. But I did not propose to prove, in support of the proposition, that the Pope of Rome resided in Ozark, or that New York was situated in Florida, or that the moon was made of green cheese, but simply proved the proposition by reading the word of God: "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John."—Matthew xi, 12, 13. "The law and the prophets were until John. Since that time the kingdom of heaven is preached, and every man presseth into it."—Luke xvi, 16. "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God."—Mark i, 1. Mark then at once introduces the ministry of John as that beginning.

Again, I stated further that the Missionary Baptists did not claim to be Protestants from the Church of Rome, but claimed to be descendants of those who always rejected the Roman Church, and all her usurpations and unscriptural dogmas; and that such a Christian people had always existed from the days of John the Baptist until now. Presuming the gentleman will hardly expect me to write a history in detail for his information, I will, as I did at Pleasant Ridge, refer him to such authorities as will, I think, furnish the gentleman with the information he seems to desire, provided he can divest himself of the influence of early training long enough to examine them. On the occasion referred to I read from D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation; History of the Baptists, by Orchard; History of the Baptists, by Backus; and a more recent and unanswerable work, called "Baptist Succession," by Ray, of Lexington, Kentucky.

But to return to the "onslaught." I am left to guess in what it consists. It would be rather too egotistical for me to presume that the "onslaught" was so desperate that there is not a greasy spot left; therefore I must modestly conclude that the argument, in the estimation of the gentleman, was too insignificant to require allegations or specifications; although he felt called upon to publish me to the world. Well, I will make one more guess at what the reverend gentleman is driving at, and when I give what little light I have on that subject, if he is still in the dark and in quest of information, my last and parting advice will be to lay Bascomb, Watson and Wesley on the shelf for awhile, and ply himself to the New Testament, with a prayerful desire to know the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

Now for the next guess. Perhaps the gentleman refers, after all, to my eulogy on John Wesley. I said and still say that Wesley was a great man; and in some important respects a much more consistent man than many would-be great men of the present day on some important subjects. For instance, he brought with him from the Episcopal Church, firmly imbedded in his religious principles, that Romish dogma, "baptismal regeneration," and insisted upon the baptism of children, laying down as a predicate that, "as original sin cleaves to every child of man, infants were proper subjects of baptism, seeing that in the ordinary way they cannot be saved unless this be washed away in baptism, and that without it they would be liable to eternal damnation." Believing this, it is perfectly consistent, perfectly reasonable that he should bend all his energies in this soul-saving work. Why, sir, if I believed that doctrine, and felt that I was called by God to preach and practice it, it seems to me that I would never rest day nor night, but, with my pitcher in one hand and Discipline in the other, I would traverse the land from house to house, wherever I could hear of a new-born baby.

But how those who deny the Wesleyan doctrine of baptismal salvation—the only consistent predicate for infant baptism that I have ever seen laid down, as I conceive—can still hold to and practice the Wesleyan conclusion, is strange logic to me. I consider that the practice of infant baptism tends to subvert the ordinance of Christian baptism, and to render nugatory all the teachings of Christ and his apostles in reference to believers' baptism, and there is no other baptism taught by them.

It is not to be presumed that a Christian teacher would teach or practice that which he did not desire all men to believe and practice. No proposition, therefore, can be more easily demonstrated than this: If all were to adopt and practice infant baptism there could not, in the very nature of things, ever be another single case of believers' baptism. But I rejoice to know, through the indomitable energy of our Baptist forefather, that we have a country—nominally, at least—of religious liberty. All I expect or ask for is the privilege of worshiping God under my own vine and fig-tree unmolested.

Where Are the Sermons?

MR. EDITOR: In the Sunday School Magazine for November is a short article taken from some paper, inquiring: "Where are all the sermons?" and supposing that there are a hundred thousand of them preached every week, and what becomes of them.

The parable of the sower of the seed tells. As it was then, so it is now. The seed represents the word of God—the sermon-deliverer his messengers. Some seed fall by the wayside, and the fowls of the air gather them up. As these seed go to nourish and fatten the birds, so these seed sown by the way may nourish and fatten the birds of intellect which devour them, and their effects may live in mental and physical development, and modern progress, claimed by some to be independent of the gospel. Some fall upon stony ground, where there is not much depth of earth, and for want of the moisture and fertility to continue the life which the seed, from the moisture and heat, superinduces, lives awhile and dies. Some fall among thorns, germinate, and grow awhile; but the thorns, representing everything unfriendly to the growth, choke the producing germs, and they linger and die. These fall, not on any mentioned deficiency in the soil, for we infer that they spring with vigor into life, but are choked by the surrounding difficulties, nurtured by the same ground which gave them life, are overcome thereby and die, as many a hopeful prospect in the soul has been choked out and destroyed by the cares of this life, the deceitfulness of riches, and the pride of the human heart. Oh, that we could destroy these noxious weeds! Some fell upon good ground and produced, some thirty, some sixty and some an hundred-fold. These are they which inspire hope and give reward to the sower, and establish his faith. These are the seed which produce the harvest, and supply the sower with means of reproduction, and the good work goes on. All the sowers, in the sense of sermon-makers, like seed-sowers, are not equally skillful. All do not separate the wheat from the chaff; indeed some mix with the seed dust or ashes, in order to scatter a few seed over a large space. The seed germinate and grow, but for want of support fall about and fail of satisfactory production. Some of the sowers (sermon-makers,) alas! do not sow good seed. The enemy of the husbandman sowed tares, and it is greatly to be feared that tares are often mixed with the good seed, thereby lessening the yield. These seed in renewing their life, whether in bad or good ground, die, and it is this growing life which springs up and reproduces its kind. It is not the body that is sown that lives. It dies. The principle of life in it is reproduced in the ground when sown. The sermon folded away is the body of the seed, and is dead. The life principle is reproduced and lives. The only use that the dead body of the sermon can be is the nutriment it returns to the soil, which helps to reproduce for the sower good seed for future use.

Oh, that none but good seed be sown, and that the yield may be abundant; and, like the germ from the seed, may we all grow in grace! If we are not conscious of growth, progress, the service is irksome. We weary of travel if our conveyance does not hasten us to the end of our journey. So also is it if we are not conscious of progress on our spiritual journey.

LAYMAN.

WHEN we turn away from some duty or some fellow-creature, saying that our hearts are too sick and sore with some great yearning of our own, we may often sever the lines on which a divine message was coming to us. We shut out the man, and we shut out the angel who had sent him on to open the door.—Edward Garrett.

KATE FIELD says the man who has held her hand in his more than two or three seconds does not live. Who would have thought it could have been so suddenly fatal?

NO PERSON ever got stung by hornets who kept away from where they were. It is so with bad habits.

Obituaries.

DIED, near Forest, Mississippi, of typhoid pneumonia, on the fourth of November, HENRY H. GRAY, son of George W. and Mary Gray, in the thirteenth year of his age.

Henry was a good boy. He was a member of Forest Sunday school, and was always punctual and with good lessons. May God console the bereaved, and help them all to meet beyond the river of death, in the land of rest. C. MCDONALD.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, on the fourth instant, MARTIN LUTHER, only child of Rev. Noah F. and Mary E. Mitchell, aged about six years. The father of this little boy, Rev. N. F. Mitchell, preceded his son a little over three years to that goodly land. The widowed wife's earthly hopes were then centered in her darling boy; but the fell destroyer came, and he was laid by the side of that father.

PRINCE'S SPRINGS, Nov. 14, 1874.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

DIED, after an illness of twelve hours, in Elmore, Alabama, October 13, 1874, WALTER K., second son of Dr. William F. and B. U. Beckett, aged six years and nine months.

Little Walter was a bright and promising boy, and as a child evinced the happy faculty of gaining and keeping friends. He was dedicated to God in infancy, and, having been instructed by pious parents, was punctual in his prayers night and morning. He was much attached to religious people, and delighted in the songs of Zion. His favorite hymn, "I want to be an angel," he often sang, and would say to his mamma that he wanted to be an angel. In the death of dear little Walter Harmony Sabbath school sustains the loss of one of her brightest members. He invariably received the commendation of the superintendent. He was punctual to repeat a verse of Scripture in answer to his name.

R. F. PERDUE, P. C.

IT IS sad to chronicle the death of loved ones, but it is a task to which we are called. On the twenty-second of July last little ZELLA, daughter of Dr. R. L. Dunn, passed away from earth to her home in the skies. On the twenty-sixth of August little DENA was suddenly called away to join Zella in the heavenly home. Then all was calm and sad at home. There were left two sweet little boys and one daughter to these devoted parents. But death came again, and DIXIE has passed suddenly to rejoin the sweet angel sisters already gone to Jesus. Dixie was a lovely little boy, full of thought and promise. He often said to mamma and papa: "God will take care of us." He was not mistaken—God has taken care of sweet angel Dixie; and as he looks back to these fond parents he says: "Don't weep for me. God will take care of you and me." These three lie side by side in their little graves. But do not let us think of them as there, but as in heaven. May God's grace console and comfort these sadly-bereaved parents.

R. D. NORSWORTHY, Pastor.

MARY ETTA MATHEUS, daughter of A. W. and S. J. C. Mathews, was born in Dale county, Alabama, May 9, 1861, and died of congestion of the brain, in Georgiana, Alabama, October 17, 1874.

Being little Etta's teacher, both in the day and Sabbath school, the writer's association with her was necessarily intimate. Few children surpassed her in sprightliness of mind and genuine nobleness of heart. During her last week at school she received the prize for excellence in reading, and she was ever an apt and diligent pupil. At Sabbath school, of which she was a regular attendant for four years of her pure child-life, she was prompt, attentive and earnest, eagerly seeking to store her mind's treasure-house with gems of love and truth, whose beauty would never fade, and whose luster would never grow dim. About a month previous to her death, during a religious revival in our midst, Etta, with all the faith of innocent, trusting childhood, laid her little heart at the feet of Him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

MARY SHORES.

SISTER WILLMURTH PARKER was born August 2, 1815. Her maiden name was Bickham. She was married to Bro. Jesse Parker, January 5, 1832, with whom she lived happily, at their residence near Beauregard, Mississippi, until the ninth day of November, 1874, when she was called from earth to her eternal home. Sister Parker united with the Methodist Church some time in the year 1837, and remained a consistent member to the day of her death. It was the writer's privilege to visit her during her sickness, and while speaking to her of the eternal world, and her near approach to its shore, she said she was unable to exercise that faith which brings perfect peace to the soul, but had doubts and fears lest at last she should fall short of the promise. After reading some of the promises of God, and singing that beautiful hymn, commencing, "Father, I stretch my hands to thee," her faith took hold of the promise and she joined in the singing. When the friends bowed in prayer she gave expression to her full soul in shouts of praise to the Redeemer for his abounding love. A large procession of friends followed his remains to their last resting-place in the graveyard in Beauregard, there to await the summons which shall awake the dead.

E. F. M.

WILLIAM CUNNINGHAM, son of John and Mary Cunningham, was born near Macmlinville, Warren county, Tennessee, and died at his home (Bell's Landing, Alabama,) of hemorrhagic malarial fever, on the twentieth of October, 1874, in the twenty-sixth year of his age.

Bro. Will, as he was familiarly called, was among that happy number who shared so largely in the life-imparting power of the Spirit of God during a meeting we held at this place (Bell's Landing,) assisted by Bros. A. M. Jones and T. Y. Abernathy, embracing the first Sunday in last month.

He had for several years been engaged in the mercantile business, and his genial face, manly bearing, unquestioned integrity, and unswerving fidelity in the management of every interest confided to his care, had thoroughly embalmed him in the hearts of all who knew him. With the exception of a few hours the writer watched beside his bed the last two days and nights of his illness, and received repeatedly from him assurance of a well-defined faith and a perfect resignation to the affliction he so patiently endured.

"Of course," said he, "I have much to live for." Few young men could look to future years with more flattering prospects than could he; but how soon and sudden does the inscrutable hand of God break the whole train of human hopes, for, despite all that the very best medical skill and unremitting care of relatives and friends could do, he continued to grow worse until, at one o'clock on the morning of the twenty-sixth of October, just while there was but a sufficient number on watch to attend his wants, the divine realities of the eternal city seemed to burst upon his mortal vision, attended with a surprising increase of strength—sufficient to enable him to administer his dying charge. "Now," said he, "I am going to leave you. Tell them all to come in, and let me tell them good-by." Then, looking the writer in the face and calling him by name, he said: "What's this that steals upon my frame? Is it death? Is it death? Preach my funeral, write my obituary. Tell my sister and the church how I died." Then, turning to a relative, he gave suitable directions how to dispose of his business and means. The scene was inexpressibly sublime. He talked fast, as if he had but a few minutes to deliver an important message.

Here is a mortal man, bedewed already with the dampness of the last river, holding out one hand to receive from relatives and friends the last tearful good-by, the other engaged with his last enemy. He spoke of seeing his sainted mother, who had preceded him to the better land, and of her dying request. Then, raising his hands, he said: "O that beautiful land! If I had wings I would fly away and be at rest." Well may some who were present say that his victory was truly enviable. Thank God for converting power and dying grace!

J. L. SKIPPER, Pastor.

BELL'S LANDING, ALA., Oct. 28, 1874.

REV. EDMOND R. H. TOWNLEY is dead—one of the main pillars of Pollard circuit. He was born in New Hanover county, North Carolina, February 23, 1816; moved from there to the State of Alabama; from there to Escambia county, Florida; from thence to Choctaw, Alabama, and then again back to Escambia county, Florida, and there married Miss M. Dearman. He joined the church at the camp meeting known as the Moody camp meeting, near Pensacola, in the year 1856, and embraced religion thirteen months afterward. Immediately he set up his family altar, and continued in rapid succession to take up all the Christian duties in real earnest; and, although not regularly licensed, during the war he preached far and near, having the work at heart, and being the only pastor. After the war he was licensed to preach, and continued faithful and zealous in the work until the day of his death, which occurred July 9, 1874.

When in his presence you could but "take knowledge of him that he had been with Jesus." He always carried with him that seraphic fire which glowed in the martyrs. The church has not only sustained a loss, but the whole country, for he was both physician and preacher for the people, in whom they had the utmost confidence; and to the children he was a father. Indeed, then, we sustain a loss; but our loss was his eternal gain, for he rests from his labors and his works do follow him. He leaves a weeping wife and twelve children to mourn their sad loss, and has gone up to join his three others in glory. Well may we sing:

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

D. C. STANLEY, P. C.

The following resolutions were adopted by the third Quarterly Conference of Pollard circuit:

Whereas, It has pleased the great Head of the church, in his good providence and wisdom, to call from the ranks of the local ministry of the Pollard circuit one of its most widely-known, best and most holy men, the Rev. Edmond R. H. Townley; therefore,

Resolved, That we recognize and acknowledge both the goodness and wisdom of God in that he has taken our brother in a short disease, or across Jordan at a narrow place, and has brought him to the mansions of glory after he has served us a long, useful and exemplary life.

Resolved, That we heartily cherish the memory of our departed brother, while we deeply bemoan our loss; and we will try to emulate his goodness, usefulness, and high-toned, virtuous life.

Resolved, That we deeply feel the loss which the church sustains in this case.

Resolved, That we sympathize with his bereft family, and pray that the grace of God may be sufficient for them to reach that better country.

Resolved, That this be attached to and sent with the memoir to the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication,

J. J. LATHRAM,

HONOR is but the reflection of a man's own actions shining bright in the face of all about him, and from thence rebounding upon himself.—South.

RESIGNATION.

Father, I have learned to trust,
And feel at length that thou art just
To take away
Each staff and stay
Which hindered me
From trusting thee;
I now resign
My will to thine.

Not till I found myself forsaken,
And all I clung to most was taken—
Of friends bereft,
Till few were left—
Could I look up,
Accept the cup,
And calmly say:
Be thou my stay.

Now with confiding love I rest
Upon my precious Savior's breast,
And feel that he
My friend will be
Through all the strife
With Jesus near
I need not fear.

Yes, I have fully learned at last
On him my every care to cast.
My dearest friends
Are in his hands;
I'll trust his care,
And leave them there;
Say: "Peace, be still!"

Wives of Great Men.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If you were curious enough to inquire into the opinions of the great men of the world touching women, you would find running down the course of history one consistent course of abuse of them. One great man said that fops, in the next world, would be degraded into women, and another said it was better that one man should be born than a thousand women. And they have been just as wicked on the subject of marriage as they have concerning one of the parties to it. And all this would be very sad for women if it were said by the angels; but, considering that it is only said by men, I don't think it much matters, and especially if you remember that on the other side of the page there is a stream of praise of women such as I hope is more true. One of the best love passages occurs very early. It is in the Book of Genesis, where it is said that one of the patriarchs served seven years for Rachel, but for the love he bore to her the seven years seemed but as one day. No love poet has ever said anything fairer than that.

It may have occurred to you that you would find out what women ought to be by looking at the wives of great men, inasmuch as they would be sure to make admirable choices, and a collection of their wives would consequently be a collection of angels. I am sorry to tell you that great men have behaved just as small men in this matter. Many of their marriages have been very noble, and many others very miserable. Whatever inspiration they have had in other matters, they have been left to their own devices in this matter; and, as we are going to look into the subject a little, let us first ask if there is any principle which has operated to make those marriages what they have been; for a collection of marriages without principle are like a collection of heads without a string. The principle seems to me to consist in the understanding of the word friendship in its grand old sense—in the sense of the man we read of as saying that "it passed the love of women." Friendship, rightly understood, is the grandest prerogative, the noblest privilege, and the most blessed gift of mankind. You may say to me that I ought to love my relatives. But I don't.

A woman comes to me and says: "Do you love me?" I say: "I don't." "Well, I am your aunt," she says. "I can't help it," I reply. I had nothing to do with electing my aunt, or my grandfather, and as to my cousins, "distance lends enchantment to the view" oftentimes. You cannot love people because of their relationship. The true friendship of two people is that friendship which draws them together without any compulsion. There is no social tyranny to make people friends in the old sense. Take what in old countries we call loyalty; it is very often mean and miserable, but occasionally noble enough. When a prince has a wry neck, and the courtiers carry their heads aside, because the prince has a crooked neck, that is simply absurd. When the queen ties her vail under her chin on a windy day, and other ladies tie their miserable veils under their ridiculous chins on other days that are not windy, then it is simply laughable. But when princes are wise and valiant, and lead their people nobly, then loyalty and love of them becomes something noble.

There is a passage in DeQuincey in which he says that he wonders how any honorable Roman could keep from wishing to kick Jupiter. You remember that Jupiter was an omnipotent god, but an omnipotent rascal. Why did they worship these gods? Not because they loved them; because they were great, big, strong gods, who could hurt them. In such a religion there was no nobility and no friendship. But with religion in which men speak of God as their father and friend and leader, and when they call him the Good Shepherd, the Redeemer, and the Savior, then there springs up between the worshipers and the God they worship this sublime friendship, this mutual regard, this drawing together; religion becomes nobleness, and worshiping a sublimity. Now this friendship is necessary in marriage. But some of you will say: Every man is a friend to his wife. Do you really think so, soberly? I read in the newspapers some very striking methods which some men employ to show their friendship for their wives. Women are always throwing themselves away upon men, and men upon women, with whom they would never have spent an hour if they could not have married them.

I admit that it is a mystery why any man marries any woman; and it is always a mystery to the neighbors what that man could see in that fright, or that woman in that fool to marry. But what I want to show you is that where great men have been happy with their wives, they have married women with whom they could have had a noble friendship if they had not married them. It is too late to warn some of you, I know, but I may be in time to save some of you. Whether clergymen ought to marry or not I do not know; but we will take four clerical weddings, two good and two bad. One shall be the wedding of weddings, that shook the world more than any other of modern times, that of Martin Luther, the monk, to Catherine Deborah, the nun. Then the world shook, the Catholics were horrified, and the Pope laughed, and thought Luther had certainly flushed himself this time, while the timid Protestants shook their heads and said: "O doctor, you shouldn't have gone so far."

You know, in the old country, when anything unfortunate happens to the good people, it is called "an affliction which is to be overruled for their spiritual good;" but when it happens to the heterodox it is "a judgment." I beg you to keep up the distinction, because it is so full of Christian charity. Luther's marriage was followed by a judgment, but the judgment was like a damp rocket—it would not go off; for, instead of a judgment, it was followed by one of the most gracious pictures of domestic life which ever the world has witnessed. I do not say that Mrs. Luther had a great understanding, but she had understanding enough to understand that her husband's understanding was greater than hers, and that is a very great thing for any woman to understand. That man's heart was as big as his head, and his head was as big as his heart. The things that interested him interested his wife.

He had left the old church and so had she. His studies she tried to understand as far as the little children would let her, and so their life was one of almost unbroken happiness. Now there was Joseph Hooker, to turn to the Anglican Church. He was the most injudicious of Hookers in regard to marriage. We will look inside his parsonage. Three scholars went to his house one day to talk with him, and I wish I had been there to listen; and while they were deep in discussion the door opened, and a shrill voice called: "Richard, come and rock the cradle." Again he returned, resumed the conversation, and again that voice of wire came, and the talk was interrupted. Noticing the look of pity on his friends' faces, he turned to Cranmer and said: "My dear George, the saints in this world have to endure more than the usual amount of suffering, so that we who are not saints must not repine at what the divine Providence has given us to bear." That was a very pretty speech, only when you have been more than usually making a fool of yourself you had better not say D. V. that day. It is true, no doubt, but you had better leave it out. You remember, perhaps, about Socrates' wife, a terrible woman.

Socrates went out to a dinner party one day, and a young man, with customary forwardness, asked him why he married Xantippe. Says he: "I'll tell you. If you want to learn horse-breaking you will not take a tender-mouthed horse, but one with a hard mouth. I want to manage men, and I thought if I could manage Xantippe I could certainly manage men." Now take Richard Baxter. All of you here, being good, religious people, have read the Saints' Everlasting Rest, or have it on your shelves, which is the next best thing. He labored at Kidderminster, and in the course of his preaching a young woman heard him. Some women have a great tendency to fall in love with their pastors. So it was with this young woman, and Baxter was very much astonished when he found it out. Like a wise man he did not refuse the good which the gods provided for him, and so it was settled by and by that they should marry. But before they married they drew up a protocol, in which they agreed that she would not require from him one hour that ought to be given to his ministerial duties, and he required of her that she would not bother him with her money or her money matters, or her law matters growing out of her money matters.

And then for seventeen years, as he says, "she was the meetest help a man could have." That woman watched over him. Sometimes he was neglectful of courtesies and she kept him in order. She sweetened his temper when it was a little soured, and when the English church, which had offered him a miter, sent him to jail, he stood out one of the noblest Nonconformists of England, the men who have widened our liberty and helped you to yours, and that woman helped him in his prison; and then, alas! she died and left him in a loneliness worse than the first. They were friends. Now take the last of these four clerical marriages, that of the famous man, John Wesley. John Wesley had will enough to be a president or a king, and could govern men well; but whenever he had anything to do with women he broke down. They were mysteries he could not solve. All his affairs with women were fiascoes. He came out here to Georgia to preach the gospel, and became acquainted with Sophia Cumston. She was a young girl who wore long curls, danced, and did not dislike the suppers that follow balls. Now it is a good deal for one man to undertake to do for a woman, to be her tutor, pastor, master and lover.

But Wesley did it. Finding her lover to be of an ascetic turn, Sophia clipped her curls and became a sweet little Puritan. By and by, when John Wesley thought it was time to marry, he did one of those foolish things that only very wise men can do. On board the ship that brought him over were some elders of that pious German sect, the Moravians. He referred the question whether he should marry Sophia to Moravian elders. Sophia didn't like it, and it wasn't likely that she should. So there grew up a coolness between them, and as coolness began the curls grew longer, and as it went on she began to dance, and, last of all, she took another man and married him. Wesley didn't like that, and when she presented herself for communion refused her. At last, having made America very hot, Wesley went back to England to cool. Sometimes he would still think he had the gift for marriage, and sometimes that he had not; but at last, in an evil hour, he married a widow lady. After marriage everything went well for awhile, as it always does; the barometer always stands "set fair." But it began to fall, and by and by it got stormy.

Sometimes she opened his letters, and found letters from women on their spiritual affairs; and you know what curious letters women will write about their spiritual affairs—letters in which they would quote from the Song of Solomon things which Mrs. Wesley could not spiritually discern. And by and by Wesley wrote her some letters—letters which were singularly injudicious, because to tell a woman all you think about it, you know, is very injudicious. So it went on; but we will draw the curtain there, because it is said that the lady went from hard words to what often follows them. Some years afterward she went off and never came back, and Wesley wrote in his diary words concerning that event which have not been equaled since for conciseness! "I did not leave the woman; I did not send her away; I shall not send for her back." That ended the married life of John Wesley. Perhaps the most melancholy marriage in this world was Milton's, and the most unintelligible. The most learned man in Europe, and the nearest approach to Apollo, in bodily attainments, the world has ever seen, at thirty-seven years he goes away, tells no one, and brings back with him a girl—his wife.

Before a month he sat down to write his memorable treatise on Divorce. In a little time she cried for her mother and he let her go home. Then take Dr. Samuel Johnson. At about twenty-seven he was in Burlington, seeking work, and was introduced to a lady named Porter. She was fair, fat and forty—in fact forty-seven. She pitied him in his poverty, and they married. Not long after Johnson had to go to London, and the poor woman had to go back to her own place, and she died before he was able to bring her to his home. But she had loved him in his poverty, and he never forgot her, and we read that he poured out his soul for her and prayed that her soul might have repose. If there were time we might look at Wordsworth's simple, noble domestic life; but let it pass, for time passes. There was the marriage of John Flaxman, to whom Sir Joshua Reynolds said that he had ruined himself when he married. But he went to Rome, and his genius was inspired to success there, while his wife watched over him, and held him, as it were, always in her arms, so that at last when she was taken from him this gentle, noble man did the best thing he could, and died too.

Two more cases, and I will conclude. These are two personal pictures, and are so contrasted that if they were not taken out of the famous history of England you might think they were taken from the imagination. The first is out of the life of that great man, Sir Thomas More, of whom it is enough to say that he was the friend of Erasmus. The lady he married was a capital housekeeper and nothing more. When he had to decide between serving God or Henry the Eighth he stood firm as his conscience bade him, and he was thrown into the tower. She visited him there and tempted him, as did Job's wife, to yield up his conscience and be free. When he spoke of conscience, she had never heard of it—didn't know of any pickle by that name. And so she left him, and that is all we hear of her, except that she went back to Chelsea. More was executed, and she never saw him again, though twice on the way to the scaffold a woman pressed through the armed guards and kissed him. That was his daughter, Margaret Roper, who was a nurse, a child, a companion and a friend to him all her life. Now for the other picture. Lord William Russell was put upon his trial. His wife sat there to take notes of the proceedings. After his sentence she demeaned herself to ask mercy of Charles the Second. She could not get it; even a monarch cannot give what he has not got, and she asked for mercy.

She took the little children to take a last sad look at their father, and when they had kissed him she went away with them and came back again. Bishop Burnet gave us an account of what happened. She came back and stayed to have their last food together, and she kept her spirits so within herself that she gave him no disturbance at parting. After she had gone he broke out in praise of her. The next day he died like a gentleman. The day his head rolled in the dust that woman's heart broke. Yet, frail as she was, she lived for forty years to keep her promise, made to him at that parting, to live for the sake of the children. Contrast the two. Time flies, and the cases are endless. I leave you to judge whether the principle I lay down is right. Meditate upon this. One of the greatest mistakes is marrying people who, if you did not marry, you would not think of passing any time with, with whom you have nothing in common. And as for looking into a woman's eyes all the time, it cannot be done. There must come into this friendship, which will stay with you throughout life, bear eternal fruit and live forever.—Lecture of Rev. George Dawson, the English Orator, at Philadelphia.

THE members of the Austrian Polar Expedition declare that explorations in the direction of the North Pole are hopeless of a satisfactory result, and that the reports of the existence of an open polar sea are untrue.

NO MAN ever sank under the burden of to-day. It is when to-morrow's burden is added to the burden of to-day that the weight is more than a man can bear.

WHEN a dog's tail is straight he is in doubt or trouble; when it is curled he is merry and happy. But the dog always prefers to curl his own tail.

Why Spurgeon Smokes.

Spurgeon, in the London Telegraph, says: "I demur altogether, and positively to the statement that to smoke tobacco is in itself a sin. It may become so, as any other indifferent action may, but as an action it is no sin. Together with hundreds of thousands of my fellow-Christians I have smoked, and with them I am under the condemnation of living in habitual sin, if certain accusers are to be believed. As I would not knowingly live even in the smallest violation of the law of God, and sin in the transgression of the law, I will not own to sin when I am not conscious of it. There is growing up in society a Pharisaic system which adds to the commands of God the precepts of men; to that system I will not yield for an hour. The preservation of my liberty may bring upon me the upbraidings of many of the good, and the sneers of the self-righteous; but I shall endure both with serenity so long as I feel clear in my conscience before God.

"The expression, 'Smoking to the glory of God,' standing alone, has an ill sound, and I do not justify it; but in the sense in which I employed it I still stand to it. No Christian should do anything in which he cannot glorify God; and this may be done, according to Scripture, in eating and drinking and the common actions of life. When I have found intense pain relieved, a weary brain soothed, and calm, refreshing sleep obtained by a cigar, I have felt grateful to God and have blessed his name; this is what I meant, and by no means did I use sacred words trillingly. If through smoking I had wasted an hour of my time—if I had stinted my gifts to the poor, if I had rendered my mind less vigorous—I trust I should see my fault and turn from it; but he who charges me with these things shall have no answer but my forgiveness.

"I am told that my open avowal will lessen my influence; and my reply is that, if I have gained any influence through being thought different from what I am, I have no wish to retain it. I will do nothing upon the sly, and nothing about which I have a doubt. I am most sorry that prominence has been given to what seems to me so small a matter, and the last thing in my thoughts would have been the mention of it from the pulpit; but I was placed in such a position that I must either by my silence plead guilty to living in sin, or else bring down upon my unfortunate self the fierce rebukes of the anti-tobacco advocates by speaking out honestly. I chose the latter; and although I am now the target of these worthy brethren, I would sooner endure their severest censures than sneakingly do what I could not justify, and earn immunity from their criticism by tamely submitting to be charged with sin in an action which my conscience allows."

Radical.—What kind of wine did our Savior make at Cana?

Scriptural.—It was miraculous water-wine, instead of ordinary grape-wine.

R.—Yes, but was it intoxicating wine?

S.—Nobody knows, unless we accept as evidence the fact that it has intoxicated so many biblical interpreters.

R.—Did it contain alcohol?

S.—Nobody cares.

R.—Was it fermented wine?

R.—Of the two kinds of wine mentioned in the Bible, which was this?

S.—The only two kinds of wine mentioned in the Bible are ordinary wine, of which we know much, and this Cana wine, of which we know little.

R.—Is it possible that our Savior would make that kind of wine which is called a "mocker?"

S.—"Mocker" is not the name of a kind of wine, but a term applied, in certain connections, to wine in general.

R.—How can wine in general be called both a blessing and a curse?

S.—It can be so called, according as the writer is considering either its uses and benefits, or its dangers, temptations and abuses; just as water may be praised as refreshing the thirsty, or denounced as drowning the shipwrecked; just as fire symbolizes the glory of heaven and the torments of hell.—Congregationalist.

THE GREAT MASTER.—"I am my own master!" cried a young man proudly, when a friend tried to persuade him from an enterprise which he had on hand. "I am my own master!"

"Did you ever consider what a responsible post that is?" asked his friend.

"Responsible? Is it?"

"A master must lay out the work which he wants done, and see that it is done right. He should try and secure the best ends by the best means. He must keep on the lookout against obstacles and accidents, and watch that everything goes straight; else he must fall."

"Well?"

"To be master of yourself you have your conscience to keep clear, your heart to cultivate, your temper to govern, your will to direct, and your judgment to instruct. You are master over a hard lot; and if you don't master them they will master you."

"That is so," said the young man.

"Now I could undertake no such thing," said his friend. "I should fail, sure, if I did. Saul wanted to be his own master, and failed. Herod did. Judas did. No man is fit for it. One is my master, even Christ. I work under his direction. He is regulator; and where he is master all goes right."

"One is my master, even Christ," repeated the young man slowly and seriously.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Reformed Episcopal Church is extending itself to Pittsburg, where a church has just been established, and another in East Liberty, one of its suburbs. Bishop Cummins has been preaching recently in Canada.

ACCORDING to the reports of the semi-annual meeting of the "Praying Band Union" of New England, at Chelsea, Massachusetts, October 27, there are twenty-nine bands associated together, with a membership of 424.

ON THE twenty-fourth of October, at the tabernacle, Mr. Spurgeon baptized his two sons, in the presence of a large congregation. He also addressed the youths on the solemnity of the profession they had made. They are both destined for the ministry.

THE London Christian World states that the first copy of proposed new readings, preparatory to a final revise, suggested by the New Testament revision committee of that portion of the authorized version they have dealt with, is in private circulation.

AT THE meeting of the American Board of Missions, a few weeks ago, Rev. Joseph Veesuna, of Japan, made a pathetic appeal for money to establish a Christian educational institution in Japan. Rev. Peter Parker subscribed $1,000, Governor Page $1,000, and a number of smaller sums were subscribed.

THE Sunday-school statistics of Europe at present are stated to be as follows: Germany, 1,218 schools, 8,643 teachers, 81,785 scholars; France, 990 schools, 41,520 scholars; Spain, 20 schools, 95 teachers, 1,000 scholars; Italy, 90 schools, 4,000 scholars; Switzerland, 600 schools, 2,096 teachers, 46,370 scholars.

CHURCH PROPERTY in the District of Columbia has been assessed, according to its market value, at $1,531,000, of which sum $1,426,000 are credited to church property in Washington city. For some years it has been exempt from taxation, but now it will have to pay the same as other real estate, namely, three per cent.

BOTH houses of the Protestant Episcopal Convention have concurred in the adoption of a canon prohibiting any changes in the ritual looking toward the use of incense, the carrying of a crucifix, the adornation of the elements of the holy communion, or any other act of religious service which shall tend toward Romanism.

GOING TO BRAZIL.—Rev. Dr. J. Leighton Wilson, says the Christian Observer, goes to Brazil to personally inspect our great and growing work in that empire. He expected to leave home on November 17 and Baltimore on November 19. He goes via New York. We hope that this beloved servant of God may have a pleasant and prosperous voyage, and a safe and speedy return.

OF THE 187 clergymen who received the degree of D. D. last year there were 28 Presbyterians, 23 Methodists, 18 Baptists, 13 Southern Presbyterians, 13 Congregationalists, 8 Lutherans, 8 United Presbyterians, 3 each Reformed (Dutch,) Reformed (German,) Reformed (Southern Association,) and Unitarian, while the Universalists and Reformed Episcopal bring up the rear with one each.

AN exchange says: "They have an advanced way of punishing drunkenness in Burmah. The drunkard is paraded through the streets by the State ministers, who read the crime at the street corners, and lash him with thongs. He is then taken to the high court, flogged more severely, and then sent home. If he is found guilty a second time he is treated in the same way, and then banished from the country."

IN South India the London Missionary Society has 21 European and 11 native missionaries, besides 164 evangelists, catechists and teachers, making the total working force 196. These care for 131 stations, with 8,099 native Christians and 5,228 scholars in the schools. From the south as well as from the north of India it is reported that the number of secret disciples is rapidly increasing, and that caste is losing its power.

A NATIVE Greenlander, Tobias Morch, has been ordained at Copenhagen to work as a missionary among his countrymen. This will be the first native missionary in Greenland. It is over one hundred and fifty years since Hans Egedo began to labor among the Esquimaux of Greenland, and now this Danish mission has eight stations, besides which the Moravian Church has five smaller stations. Two teachers' seminaries have also been established.

A PARSEE writes to the Bombay Guardian that the only hope of their race, numbering some 80,000 in India, being saved from extinction is in adopting Christianity. That journal states that there are thousands of educated Parsees in Bombay who have entirely lost confidence in their own system of religion, and are perfectly convinced of the truth of Christianity. The writer expects the time when vast numbers of them will come out for Christianity together.

THERE are sixteen Catholic priests imprisoned at Coblentz, Germany, for transgression of the church laws, some of them being sentenced to seven and ten months. At the same place a society, called the Soldiers' Union, has been suppressed by the police authorities, because the members were not willing to expel four of their number belonging to the Catholic Union. At Munchen-Gladbach the last nuns have been dismissed from the schools. They will emigrate to North and South America.

AT THE recent meeting of Shantung Presbytery, in Chefoo, China, Mr. Wang Tsuy, the first convert in connection with the church at Chefoo, was licensed to preach, and Mr. Tsung Yuin Shing was ordained to the office of the ministry. It is expected that within a few months the latter will be settled as pastor over the Christians at Chih Mch. Another man has received a call, and it was expected that he should also be ordained at the same time, but he was unable to be present. The sessions, extending over more than a week, were of more than usual interest.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Western, writing from San Francisco, reports that Bishop Merrill announced to the California Conference that he and his colleagues had resolved to make no more nominal appointments. During the war, to meet certain emergencies, much latitude had been given in this direction, but this could be permitted no longer. The Bishop said a member of the Conference must occupy one of three positions in fact, and not merely in name—effective, supernumerary or superannuate.

A NOBLE SENTIMENT.—Of the late Dr. Marshman, a most successful missionary, his son says "he died in graceful poverty," after having devoted about £40,000 to missions, and a life of great privation. A short time before his death he said: "God has made my wife and me the humble instruments of contributing £30,000 to his cause, and how much happier I feel than I should if I had this sum in funds or in landed property, I cannot tell. I have never had a misgiving thought for having done it, though I have two sons unprovided for."

FROM the report of the publishing committee of the Evangelical Association (Albrecht Methodists,) at its late annual meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, we learn the net capital invested in its publishing interests is $276,616.11. During the year the net profits were $24,298.67. Improvements have been made, including the erection of a new Publishing House, to the sum of $40,693.51. The circulation of the Botschafter (German organ) is 19,966, and the Messenger (English) 9,620. The total circulation of church periodicals is 99,852 copies.

THE Unita Cattolica of Rome boasts as follows in regard to the growth of Romanism in England: In England and Scotland there were counted in 1765, 60,000 Catholics; in 1821, 500,000; in 1849, 2,500,000; and in 1865, 3,380,000. England now numbers 1,893 priests, 1,453 churches, 86 monasteries for men, 286 convents for women and 1,260 Catholic schools. England, Scotland and Wales are divided into twenty dioceses. The House of Lords contains not less than 33 Catholic members, the House of Commons 37, and the Queen's Privy Council 6. Among the baronets there are 77 of that creed.

THE annual report of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel shows the income to have been, in round figures, $5,500,000. The society has 600 missionaries in India, whose work is acknowledged as follows in a blue book issued by the Indian government: "The government acknowledges the great obligation under which it is laid to these 600 missionaries, whose blameless example and self-denying labors are infusing new vigor into the stereotyped life of the great populations placed under English rule, preparing them to be in every way better men and better citizens of the empire in which they dwell."

THE tables are turning, to a small extent at least, in missionary work. A Mohammedan missionary has made his appearance in New York. He says that the public have no idea of the extent to which Mohammedanism prevails in the world. He argues that, while its followers are widely spread over Eastern countries to the number of 200,000,000, there ought to be some show for it here. In Boston, Hong Ching Foo, from China, takes the stand in Parker Memorial Hall, in advocacy of the doctrines of Confucius. He is said to have given a very interesting discourse to a large audience. It is not stated that any conversions to his doctrine followed on the preaching.

THE Wesleyan missionary anniversary, held this year at Leeds, England, October 25, 26, 27 and 28, was a success beyond expectation. Not only were the five chapels packed at all the Sunday services, but on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday delighted thousands continued the throng. Twelve hundred persons, a large per cent. of the number the business men of the city, sat down on Wednesday to the public missionary breakfast meeting. A purse of $500 to Pastor Hocart, of the French Conference, was one of the events of the day. This was in addition to $500 previously contributed to the same object. The total contribution to the missionary cause during the progress of the anniversary was $10,000.

A SOCIETY has been formed in England, the Bishop of Winchester president, to bring about the union with the Anglican Church of Nonconformist bodies that hold the fundamental tenets of the Christian faith. The plan is to diffuse, by means of lectures, etc., a better knowledge of the history, principles and formulas of the Established Church, to promote kindly feeling between Churchmen and Nonconformists by means of friendly intercourse, and such acts of united worship as ecclesiastical law admits, to remove the obstacles to the admission of properly qualified Nonconformist ministers to orders in the Church of England. The headquarters of the society will be in London; branch associations are to be formed throughout the kingdom.

THE Foreign Mission Journal of the Southern Baptist Convention brings letters from the missionaries in its most important field—China. Rev. Mr. Hartwell, of the Chefu mission, rendered important service as interpreter in the recent trial of Mr. Corbett's assailants before the United States consul and the Tautai. The punishment of the persecutors and the decree of toleration for native Christians at Chi-nu were the results of the investigation. At Caaton six converts had recently been baptized. The trials of one of them illustrate the difficulties attending a Christian profession in China. The man had served in a government office from his youth, but was discharged by the mandarin because he had become a Christian. His wife also was alienated from him, on the ground of his new faith and the loss of his old employment.

CHANGE OF RATES.

In conformity with an agreement between the several papers published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the subscription price of the ADVOCATE, including postage, will hereafter be as follows, viz.:

One year	$2 50
Six months	1 50
Three months	80

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE of the ADVOCATE has been ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR to ministers of the gospel, and the same to the widows of deceased itinerant preachers. Where bills have been sent charging them more than that amount it was owing to the fact that they were not known as such to the book-keepers, and if they will inform us the accounts will be corrected. Should they have already paid we will credit the amount overpaid on subscription, or dispose of it as they may order.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

RATES.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate will be furnished to subscribers hereafter at the following rates, including postage:

One Year	$2 50
Six Months	1 50
Three Months	80

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

to all Ministers of the Gospel, traveling or local and widows of deceased traveling preachers.

FREE ONE YEAR

to any person forwarding to us four new yearly subscribers, with TEN DOLLARS.

Duty to Christ.

Christlieb, in his work on Modern Doubt, says most truly "that the essential in Christianity is objectively Christ himself, and the redeeming work which has its source in his person; subjectively, faith in him as redemption manifested—that is, the experience of this redeeming work in one's own heart." That many are saved through Christ without the knowledge of him, as in the case of infants and devout heathen, and of the Old Testament saints who may not have clearly apprehended the then not manifested Savior, we do not question. God is no respecter of persons, as Peter at length perceived when called to preach to a Gentile congregation: "But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." To men, however, who have the gospel, and are capable of faith and obedience, there can be no salvation without a direct acceptance of Christ.

The demands which Christ makes upon us, to confess him before men, and that we honor the Son even as we honor the Father, are imperative. It is not enough that we believe in God—there must be faith also in the Lord Jesus Christ. A moral life, distinguished by benevolent actions and blameless conduct, counts for little if the duty we owe to Christ is left undone. If we could suppose every virtue to be attained and every grace to be realized without this distinct recognition of the Son of God, we should still be condemned because we have not honored the Son even as we have honored the Father. Christ exacts a personal following by all—a discipleship which is to him, a faith that looks to himself as its object, and an obedience that regards him as the fountain of authority. Nothing can take the place of this obligation, whether it be merely moral, or clothed with the name and pretensions of religion. Christ requires our love, connected, it may be, with love to God and to our neighbor, but still a love distinctively to him as the Son of Man. "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema, maranatha." This is apparently a severe denunciation, a most rigid and sweeping declaration, but it expresses forcibly the position which the word of God occupies. The pious Jew, the conscientious Gentile, must alike receive Christ into their hearts. Once presented to them as the Son of God and the Savior of the world, his claims cannot be rejected. Henceforth to them there is salvation in "none other name," and however accepted of God before, in the times of their ignorance, they are condemned if they refuse to believe in him and to love him.

"As unto the Lord" is the grand principle of religious service, and of every action in life. In alms-giving, in the relative duties of society, in suffering, there is to be a conscious relation to Christ. His approval, his glory, and the advancement of his kingdom are to animate and direct as well as sustain in all labors and afflictions. Nothing so tests the character as the application of this principle to the affairs of life. "Christ liveth in me" expressed an experience which penetrated the consciousness of the Apostle Paul, and attended him through every hour of his Christian career. The love of Christ constrained him to every sacrifice, and to the most heroic effort. This is Christian life as distinguished from the old Hebrew piety, and from every other phase of morals and religion. It is a life inter-penetrated with a sense of devotion, of love, of gratitude to Christ, and with a sense of his presence in the heart. Religious faithfulness, in its Christian meaning, is pre-eminently fidelity to Christ. All moral obedience, all devout observances, all worship and all earthly pursuits are vitally connected with him as the divine Redeemer.

It is only necessary to glance at the essential of Christianity as Christ himself, and to refer to the duty which is demanded of all to him, to discover how sadly defective is the average conception and practice of people who live amidst the privileges of the gospel. For anything that many feel or know, the Old Testament, or the writings of the more exemplary heathen philosophers, would answer nearly as well. As apprehended by them, Christ is somehow in our system of religious truth, but they do not confess him before men, they give no distinctive and divine honor to his name, nor are their hearts aflame with love for his person. His death for them scarcely stirs the sluggish current of their thought, it warms them into no enthusiasm for the advancement of his kingdom in the world, it excites to no self-denial in his service, and it awakens no strain of praise to him who has shown such amazing love for them.

Even within the circle of avowed believers there are often tendencies to degenerate into a state of comparative indifference to Christ as the great center of truth and light. He has not always that prominence in prayer, in meditation, and in our praise that is his due. We have heard long prayers in which Christ's name was only formally mentioned just before the final amen. We have heard sermons in which his name was scarcely mentioned at all. There are few who have not heard appeals for missions, plentifully spiced with wit and humor, adorned with sparkling thought and illustration, and forcible with arguments drawn from many quarters, but with hardly any hint that it was for Christ that they were pleading. "Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus" is the inspired injunction. In word, in deed, all is to be in his name.

If God is a jealous God we may be sure that Christ is a jealous Savior. To him every knee shall bow and every tongue confess. He will not give his glory to another, nor will he abate one tittle of the honor which belongs to him. Nothing less than a bold confession, an implicit obedience, a supreme love, and a soul and life imbued with his Spirit, will satisfy him. There is a duty which we owe to him most direct and personal, and which cannot be met by any other means than by complete and absorbing devotion to him.

A Capital Book.

THE INTERIOR LIFE, BY UPHAM.

MR. EDITOR: Having just finished the perusal of this excellent work, I take pleasure in presenting its merits for the consideration of the readers of the ADVOCATE. They will find in it much to profit them, and but little, if anything, with which they do not agree. The edition before me is a 12mo, about 400 pages, issued by Harper & Bros. in 1848, eighth edition. The beauty and value of the book are inside of it—inhere in its teachings, and not in mere tinsel or mechanical display. It is gilt, not with gold, but with precious truth.

There has been a disposition manifested on the part of some to regard all those who advocate advanced religious experience as enthusiasts—persons who perhaps mean well, but whose zeal is greater than their knowledge. Shall we pause here to speak of such men as Wesley, Fletcher, Olin, Fisk, etc.? And what of Mr. T. C. Upham? He is certainly at the opposite pole from fanaticism—the author of a standard work on mental philosophy.

Some seem to think that the advocacy of the doctrine of holiness is peculiar to Methodists; they would blush to claim such an honor. Here is a writer who is not a Methodist, but, as we suppose, a Congregationalist, and yet it is interesting to notice how his views accord with those of our great Methodistic authors. Without the Methodistic dialect, he presents in substance, although different in form, the scriptural views promulgated by the founders of our church on this important theme. In his estimate of the extent of Christian duty and privilege he is not a whit behind our fathers.

Part 1 is on The Inward Life in its Connection with Faith and Love. The phrase, "interior life," seems to be in unison with these expressions of the psalmist: "Thou art my hiding-place;" "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." The apostle says: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Again: "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."

The author uses the words, "hidden" or "interior life," to "indicate a degree of Christian experience greatly in advance of that which so often lingers darkly at the threshold of the Christian's career." The author says: "It is the life of the soul incorporated into the life of Christ; and in such a way that, while it has a distinct vitality, it has so (this distinct vitality) very much in the sense in which the branch of a tree may be said to have a distinct vitality from the root."

There is no enthusiasm in the following expression: "The Christian whose 'life is hid with Christ in God' can never doubt that his spiritual existence and growth originate in and are sustained in that divine source alone."

The life under consideration may also be called "hidden," because its moving principles, its interior and powerful springs of action are not known to the world. Men of the world have very little appreciation of that great Christian philosophy which inculcates the love of holiness.

Further, the hidden life is humble, unobtrusive—"has no eye for worldly pomp, no ear for worldly applause." It is meek and lowly. The natural life is just the reverse—it covets a position in the market-place, loves to be called rabbi. It is not dependent upon localities or forms; it is in the heart and life of the true believer. "The kingdom of God is within you." "Cometh not with observation." It is not transient or fitful. It is the evergreen which lifts its verdant head above the snows of winter, and battles successfully with the stormy winds. In times of great apostasy it is found in the dwellings of the poor, in solitary places, in the recesses of valleys and mountains. But while it does not seek notoriety, it does not hide its light under a bushel; it shines out over the world, and is ever ready to go to prison and to death, if need be.

The foregoing remarks will probably relieve some minds of perplexity in regard to certain persons who profess to be holy in heart and life. The doctrine remains in all its integrity and force, but some of its advocates may have erred in speaking of their experience or attainments. In their zeal for the propagation of the great truths which they have embraced they sometimes speak and act unadvisedly—there is a want of that manifestation of humility, self-nothingness, which the very doctrine which they proclaim implies. It is impossible that we should be too energetic in our Master's service, but it is possible for us to err as to the mode. And because some have erred, either in word or deed, satan endeavors to fix our minds upon the error of these persons, instead of the great and blessed doctrine which is, it may be, unwisely advocated. A minister of the gospel said to me, a few days ago, that he and his church were so determined to avoid extreme views in regard to sanctification that he feared they had not been sufficiently emphatic and ardent in their advocacy of that degree of piety which they really believed to be attainable in this life.

Have not Southern Methodists erred at this point? While we have thought that many at the North are too outspoken and confident in their expressions in regard to holiness, and while we believe that some of their views may be erroneous, have we not allowed this disgust to drive us to a degree of depreciation of the doctrine itself? And have we not been less active in our efforts for its realization in our own hearts, and for its propagation, than were our fathers in Methodism?—less active, by far, than we should be in view of the immense importance of the subject?

It must be remembered that, after all, the Scriptures are not very explicit as to the mode of expressing our Christian experience. We are to confess Christ humbly, heartily, fully; but, in our narration of what he has done for us, each one is to be guided, to a great extent, by feeling. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." There is ground for censure or disapprobation only in those instances in which the teachings of God's word are contravened. The judges are liable to mistake as well as the judged.

The Universal Arbitrator.

The sublimity of impudence, says the New York Observer, has been frequently recorded as among the attainments of pretenders and impostors. But the proposition now gravely suggested by the highest of the Roman Catholic dignitaries in England takes the palm fairly.

It is proposed to hold an International Roman Catholic Congress in London, to consider the present dilapidated condition of the papal power, and to devise ways and means to rebuild the ruins of the fall which the Pope met with as soon as he became infallible. The Pope is said to have issued his intimations that such a congress would be a good thing, and it is not unlikely that he will be gratified by hearing of its assembling. Archbishop Manning has taken the lead in making the call, and he is reported as saying that since the temporal power has been taken away from the Pope his spiritual power has been largely increased. The movements of the friends of peace having come so prominently before the world, and the prospect of their success being so encouraging, the archbishop is led to suggest that in the event of the principle of arbitration being adopted by the nations of the earth, the Pope is the only universal arbitrator, and to him all questions of international dispute should be referred.

This is what we have called the sublimity of impudence, and the annals of history and romance may be safely challenged to produce anything equal to it, or even approaching it. It would seem to argue a want of appreciation on the part of Roman Catholic prelates of the present status of the Pope in the estimation of the world at large. Yet such ignorance, amounting to total blindness, is scarcely supposable. It is a fact well known to all intelligent persons that there is not at this time a first, second or third-rate power in the world in which the papal influence is so great as to command respectful consideration in the management of political affairs. And in such countries as Austria and France, where it has been dominant until within a very few years, it is now so thoroughly broken as scarcely to be recognized as a factor in the elements of governmental force. Spain has been the most subservient of all European States to the Pope, but the republic is now in arms against an insurrection which draws its inspiration from Rome, and when that is put down the last remnant of papal rule in the birthplace of the Inquisition will have been wiped out. The Roman Catholic Church, as a spiritual power, may continue for generations to come the most widely extended, numerous and efficient ecclesiastical agency in the earth, all the more effective because of the overthrow of its temporal authority. But the idea of its being any longer of the slightest account among the political powers of the world is so puerile and preposterous that it could be suggested only in that spirit of impudence and arrogance which sometimes is so self-asserting as to be positively sublime.

And while we are writing these lines we hear from over the sea that the civil government of Italy is about to issue a memorandum to the European powers, calling attention to the dangers to Italy from the intrigues of the Vatican, declaring that the government can no longer tolerate a permanent conspiracy in its own capital, and urging the powers to discontinue the custom of maintaining embassadors at the Holy See. And this will put an end to the semblance of influence in the hands of the papacy among the European powers.

We do indeed anticipate, with some degree of confidence, the time as coming when the civilized and Christian governments of the earth, whose great burdens of debt and of danger now are made by the supposed necessity of maintaining armies and waging wars, will agree, for mutual relief and advantage, to submit their differences to peaceful conference among disinterested parties. The downfall of the Pope will hasten this millennial reign of peace; for the intrigues of that religious power were always disturbing elements in the political affairs of the continent of Europe, and so of the world. But the day of Jesuitism has gone by. It has scarcely a foothold in Mexico, and the South American States spew it out. It has ceased to frighten even the children of kings. And in this day, when the Pope, as a civil ruler, has no more power than the moderator of a Scotch Presbyterian Assembly, to propose that the Pope shall become to all the world what Judge Fancher is to the Chamber of Commerce, is surely the most absurd of all the absurdities of Romish imposture. The miracles of winking Madonnas, and the pilgrimage of American citizens to French grottoes, are respectable farces compared with this last attempt to deceive the nations with the idea that the Pope of Rome is of any special importance, as a governor, among the peoples of the earth.

Faith Comes by Hearing.

So our venerable brother, David Ayres, thinks. He has had some three or four pulpits so constructed that he can hear the preachers. How does he construct them? In this wise: the wooden portion of the pulpit has a front and two sides, but no inclosure of wood on the rear or inner side. Inside of this pulpit is a large tin funnel, say twenty-four by eighteen inches, and running down from the desk to the floor, where it terminates in a tube. This passes down under the floor, and comes up in the pew the listener occupies. To this he attaches his ear-trumpet and hears the preacher at the distance of twenty or thirty feet, just as though you were sitting in a chair and talking to him through his ear-trumpet. The tube is of tin, not less than a half nor more than an inch in diameter. We suppose $10 would pay the cost of the tin work. Any number of tubes can go out from the bottom of the same funnel. There are four that go out from the funnel in the pulpit of St. John's, Galveston. It is desirable, to prevent the tube from becoming stopped up, to cover the top of the funnel with wire, like an ordinary sifter. The Bible desk or cushion ought to be an inch or two above the top of the mouth of the trumpet or funnel, so that the sound may easily pass down it, and through the tubes, and on to the ear of the hearer. Bro. Ayres hears the lessons, hymns, prayers and sermons just as well as other people, save when the preacher is too loud, or turns too much away from the pulpit.

THE test of a true or false Christian is his waiting for or dreading the revelation of Christ.—Bengel.

You Are Responsible.

A minister, whose praise is in all the churches, was asked on one occasion to visit a family in the deepest distress.

On his way to the house he met a brother minister, and repeated to him the sad story which had drawn him from his home. The minister was interested, and at once decided to accompany his friend on his errand of mercy.

The sight which presented itself as the two friends crossed the threshold was one not soon to be forgotten. In a room destitute of all the comforts that make an attractive home, a woman was dying. She was young in years, but on her face the traces of want and suffering and care were plainly visible. A babe, wailing feebly, was on the bed beside the mother, but her ears were closed to its cries.

A third person was present, the husband and father; but he seemed deaf to the voice of his child, as well as unable to comprehend the fact that his wife was even then passing away from earth.

He was a man tall and well formed, with finely-shaped head, and large, full eyes.

He rose and staggered toward the two gentlemen as they entered, and muttered something meant to be a welcome and an apology for the condition in which they found his home.

As his eyes met those of the gentleman who had been won to accompany his friend, the two stood a moment as if spell-bound. The clergyman was the first to speak. "Bond, can it be possible that you have come to this?"

The man thus addressed turned away his face a moment from the sad, reproachful gaze bent upon him by the clergyman, and in that moment he seemed to rally his scattered senses; then he turned fiercely upon his questioner: "You see me in a ruined home, and drink has brought me here. It has killed her," he added, pointing to his wife, "and you, sir, are responsible."

"I know it," answered the clergyman, "but as I had not seen you since your marriage I concluded that you had left the city."

"You married me," he continued. "At my wedding the wine-cup was passed. I had never tasted the accursed cup; but that night seeing you, my pastor, take a glass, I felt that I could not be wrong to follow your example, that it certainly could do no harm to take just one glass on my wedding night. But that one glass has proved my ruin, for it awakened an appetite for the intoxicating cup, and now I am its slave; and you, I repeat it, are responsible."

Hard must have been the heart of that pastor if he did not from that moment resolve to shun forever that which might cause a weaker brother to stumble. Not alone for our own safety, but for the sake of those about us who may be led astray by our example, should we resolve to touch not, taste not, handle not.—National Temperance Advocate.

REV. DR. NICHOLSON, whose withdrawal from the Protestant Episcopal Church has been announced, was formerly a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and as long ago as 1845-6 was stationed at the Poydras Street church, New Orleans. He joins the Reformed Episcopal Church. Why not come back to his first love? The Congregationalist says:

Rev. Dr. W. R. Nicholson, rector of Trinity Episcopal Church, Newark, New Jersey, has withdrawn therefrom, and will join the Reformed Episcopal Church under Bishops Cummins and Cheney. Dr. Nicholson was for many years rector of St. Paul's, Boston, and he is here still warmly remembered by Christians of every evangelical denomination as an able, earnest and devoted minister of the gospel. He is a preacher of peculiar power, and his Monday afternoon Bible classes in this city grew to be one of the notable features in its religious life. Now that he has become a Reformed Episcopalian, the public will probably be reminded by the losing party that before he became an Episcopalian he was a Methodist, but the Episcopalians were glad of him, and found him a most valuable and influential man while he was with them. Dr. Nicholson's letter of resignation having since come to light, shows how the action of the Episcopal Convention looks to one low churchman. He says:

"I cannot continue to exercise my ministry in the Protestant Episcopal Church. The church principles now so universally believed and taught, and which were reaffirmed by the late General Convention with an unwonted emphasis, are, in my judgment, not only scripturally untrue, but also (I mean no offense) deeply dishonoring to the Lord and Master, and especially so to the Holy Spirit. * * * The General Convention has made ten-fold more intense the anti-Protestant errors of the now prevailing churchmanship, and never till there is a revised prayer-book can such errors be counteracted. But of that there is no hope."

OUR CITY is enlivened this week by the visit of a large number of commanderies of Knights Templar, in attendance on a grand encampment. Commanderies from every State in the Union are represented. The number of visiting Knights is estimated at from six to ten thousand. Their turnout in uniform on our streets and their display of perfect drill are exceedingly impressive and novel.

HE that is truly polite knows how to contradict with respect, and please without adulation; and is equally remote from an insipid complaisance and a low familiarity.

REV. W. V. TUDOR, D. D., for the past four years pastor of the Carondelet Street church of New Orleans, leaves us to-day for his new field of labor. At the recent session of the St. Louis Conference he was appointed, by Bishop Keener, to the Centenary church in St. Louis. We express the common sentiment of our own people, and of the entire community, in recording the regret and sorrow with which we part with this gifted and faithful minister of the gospel. His ministry among us has been one of rare ability and power, and there have been, during his pastorate at Carondelet Street, many seals to his devoted and laborious efforts to build up the church of God. His closing sermons on last Sunday were most impressive, and listened to by crowded congregations.

In parting with the pastor the church sustains another loss in the pastor's wife, whose presence and usefulness have been universally recognized and appreciated. Her womanly devotion to Christ in the Sunday school, the choir, and in every suitable department of church work, besides the graceful example and encouragement to others, has contributed much to the general prosperity and welfare of the congregation. We bid our dear friends an affectionate good-by and a hearty God-speed. We doubt not they will receive a warm welcome to their new home in the great metropolis of the West. We congratulate our St. Louis friends on the accession which they are about to receive to the Christian society and ministry of their city.

THE Herald and Presbyter notices approvingly the resolution passed by the Episcopal General Convention enforcing family worship and family training, and says:

"We think that here is a place where the church of to-day, in all branches, has fallen from the position occupied by the church of a former generation. It is the neglect of family training. Without taking up the lamentation, in any doleful spirit, that the former days were better than these, this seems to be generally conceded. The home-training of children in religious truth and the duties of a religious life is very largely a thing of the past. This is well-nigh universally admitted. We heartily rejoice, therefore, in any movement tending to improve this condition of things. We are glad that the House of Bishops initiated this deliverance. We hope it will be heeded by the clergy of that church, and we hope the same obligation will be recognized by the ministry in the Presbyterian and all other churches. The range of subjects named in the above resolution is large, but none too large. It is not enough in training the young—or those of any age either, for that matter—to teach the direct precepts of the gospel, and leave those taught to draw the inference whether they apply to this, that or the other worldly vanity. Pastors must tell in plain terms what is forbidden conformity to the world; must give the Lord's will upon the ten thousand things, in this fashionable and world-loving age, which so absorb the mind and draw away the affections—of the young especially—from spiritual things. They must draw the line between what is Christian duty and worldly conformity. Nor need they be in much doubt where to find it. Every church has spoken out many a time, through its highest and lower judicatories, upon this whole subject. The things forbidden have been named. The best Christian meditation has been given to them by the ablest men in the church, and these deliverances should be heeded. If pastors desire to see their congregations spiritually improved we do not know of any point where their work may be rendered more hopeful than in the sphere here indicated. If family religion could be made what it ought to be we should not only see a great improvement in our churches, but it would extend into all departments of society. Business, morals, politics and religion would be benefitted together."

THE MAN WHO STOPS HIS PAPER. Philip Gilbert Hamilton, in his admirable papers on "Intellectual Life," thus talks to the man who "stopped his paper:"

Newspapers are to the civilized world what the daily house-talk is to the members of a household; they keep our daily interest in each other, they save us from the evils of isolation. To live as a member of the great white race of men, the race that has filled Europe and America, and colonized or conquered whatever other territory it has been pleased to occupy, to share from day to day its cares, its thoughts and aspirations, it is necessary that every man should read his paper. Why are the French peasants so bewildered at sea? It is because they never read a newspaper. And why are the inhabitants of the United States, though scattered over a territory fourteen times the area of France, so much more capable of concerted action, so much more alive and modern, so much more interested in new discoveries of all kinds, and capable of selecting and utilizing the best of them? It is because the newspapers penetrate everywhere; and even the lonely dweller on the prairie or in the forest is not intellectually isolated from the great currents of public life, which flow through the telegraph and press.

JUST as we are going to press the sad intelligence reaches us of the death of Mrs. Louisa C. Hundley, wife of Rev. A. C. Hundley, of the Alabama Conference. Bro. George Fontain, writing from Lower Peachtree, Alabama, November 12, says: "She died to-day in great triumph."

The Roman Propaganda.

As Protestant readers are in general unacquainted with the manner in which the Roman Catholic Church directs its mission work, we draw up the following account, mainly derived from an article entitled "A Glance at the Home Fund of the Roman Catholic Missions Among the Heathen," which has recently appeared in the Allgemeine Missions Zeitschrift. In the year 1622 the missionary operations of the various monastic orders were concentrated by Pope Gregory the Second in the Congregatio de Propaganda Fide at Rome. This is a committee of cardinals who are appointed by the Pope to superintend the Romish mission among heathen, Jews, Mohammedans, Oriental churches and Protestants. The committee now consists of 26 cardinals, a secretary, chosen from the ranks of the papal lawyers, an apostolic notary, 30 counselors and 5 corresponding clerks. This body is seldom called together, and consults only on matters of unusual importance. The control of the business of the Propaganda is in the hands of the cardinal prefect, or president, and the secretary, who, in weekly and sometimes more frequent consultations with the Pope, superintend the missions. Through them the Pope appoints missionaries and locates them, sends forth prefects and apostolic vicars, and erects bishopries and archbishopries as the progress of the missions may require them. "The powers of the Propaganda," says Abbe Durand, "are simply those of the Pope in the province of missions." It is this concentration of vast authority which gives the Central Missionary Society its peculiar energy and power. All those who are to be trained as missionaries are under the supervision of the officers of the Propaganda. There are a number of seminaries devoted to this purpose. Six of these are located at Rome. In only one of them, however (the Urbannum de Propaganda fide,) are pupils trained to be foreign missionaries. In this seminary the famous exhibitions take place on Epiphany, when pupils declaim in a great variety of languages, thus symbolizing the unity of the faith amid the diversity of earthly tongues. A spectator in 1846 counted up fifty-eight languages and dialects in which declamations were made. Well qualified judges, however, pronounce this exhibition to be for the most part parrot work, and declare that the seminary does not amount to much. There are, besides, seminaries of the Propaganda at Naples, at Paris (the school of the Missions Etrangeres is a very important one,) at Louvain, in Belgium, at Oceano, in Spain, one in Ireland, and a new one, instituted by Archbishop Manning, in London. In Germany there are no such institutions, although several societies cultivate the missionary interest in Austria and Bavaria. Besides the seminaries already mentioned, there are several monastic missionary schools at Rome and elsewhere in Italy, where a small number of pupils are trained for the service, under the inspection of the Propaganda. The pupils of the Propaganda, who are generally received about the age of fourteen, are pledged to a life-service as missionaries. Very considerable re-enforcements to the mission ranks are received from the fraternities of secular priests. These have their home in France. Foremost among them are the Lazarists. Others are the Congregation of the Holy Heart of Jesus and Mary, at Paris; the Society of Mary, at Lyons; the Congregation of the Holy Ghost and Holy Heart of Mary, at Amiens, etc. These societies also send out female missionaries to labor in schools and hospitals. The Order of the Jesuits is one of the main stays of Romish missions. The novices of this order are very carefully selected, and during their two years of probation are frequently and closely tested as to their abilities and whole manner of life. Then they take the three monastic oaths, and promise after the completion of their studies to enter into the Order of the Jesuits in whatever manner may be determined for them. Their scholastic course consists of two years devoted to Latin, Greek, rhetoric and literature, and three years devoted to philosophy, natural science and mathematics. Next they teach for five or six years. Upon this follows a theological course of about five years, in which comparatively little attention is paid to the Scriptures, but a great deal of time is given to dogmatics and ethics. The most distinguished of their graduates, however, are assigned to labor among heretics, rather than among the heathen. Those Jesuits who do become foreign missionaries are generally men of moderate abilities; though, as a rule, they have better education than any other Romish missionaries. In 1873 329 male missionaries and 59 female assistants were dismissed to their several posts. Of these 117 were Jesuits. The order last year numbered 9,101, of whom 1,558 were missionaries. Besides the missionary societies already enumerated, there have been formed since the commencement of the century auxiliary associations, which do not give men, but contribute money and prayers. The chief of these is the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, at Lyons. Its work was first suggested by Bishop Dubourg, in 1815. The originators were a widow lady, Madam Petit, and a young lady, Mlle. Icarlot. The society was organized with a central council at Lyons, May 3, 1822. It received the papal sanction, was endowed by the Popes with indulgencies, and now has branches in all parts of the world. Pope Pius the Ninth, who, when Bishop of Imola, established the first branch of this association in the Papal States, has been its especial patron, and has given contributing children who are not yet confirmed a share in the indulgencies with which the society is endowed. The contributions in the first year were $16,000. In the jubilee year (1872) they were $1,300,000. Of the official journal of the society, Annals of the Faith (bi-monthly,) 234,370 are printed, 20,000 in English. The Lyons society has vastly stimulated the missionary work in France, so that in fifty years the number of the Parisian society's missions has increased from 5 to 24, bishops from 6 to 23, European missionaries from 27 to 440, native priests from 135 to 320, converts from 350,000 to 700,000. This society, with its schools and all the similar missionary and auxiliary and monastic societies, are under the full control of the Propaganda at Rome; or, in other words, of a prefect and secretary, holding Sunday afternoon audiences with the Pope.—Independent.

THE excitement over the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States, which will open in our city on Tuesday next, has been daily increasing, and is now at fever heat. Everybody has been on tiptoe of expectation in relation to the visit, and many have thought it almost impossible that the commanderies would come such a distance just to take part in the grand conclave of their order.

But the question was definitely settled yesterday, when the Grand Commandery of Michigan, with other Sir Knights, delegations from Kansas, Colorado, Ohio and Indiana, making a splendid body of men, reached our city and were received with all the honors by the members of our own commanderies.—New Orleans Picayune, November 29.

TWO ITALIAN physicians have discovered a liquid which instantly stops the flow of blood from any kind of wound. A commission of physicians who have experimented with it in the anatomical theater of the Saneto Spirito report that it is one of the happiest of recent discoveries, and particularly serviceable on the battle-field.

HAPPINESS cannot rest till it has created for itself a claim to happiness; therefore it is a truth that whosoever esteems himself is esteemed of others.—Taylor.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

ST. JAMES HOTEL.—Our readers who may have occasion to visit our city will be pleased to learn that under the energetic and enterprising management of the present proprietors, Messrs. R. E. Rivers & Co., the above-named hotel has been thoroughly repaired and refurnished in the most superb style, and everything about it looks fresh, new, clean and inviting. The drm is fully prepared and qualified to keep a first-class hotel. See advertisement of rates.

THE GREAT JACKSON ROUTE.—This grand main and important line of railroad travel through to the great West is under excellent and faithful management, and sober, attentive and competent officers and employees. As a consequence the condition of the road has vastly improved to the few years past, and is still improving, though it may be said to be now in fine condition. See time-table in another column.

MR. JULES DELAUNAY, 142 Canal street, importer of human hair, and manufacturer of wigs and everything in his line, advises the ladies, in another column, that for their accommodation he employs an accomplished hair-dresser to comb and dress for his customers.

GEM OYSTER BAY SALOON.—Mr. G. M. Borges, at 17 Royal street, and under the St. Charles Hotel, knows as well as any other dealer how to get and keep good oysters. See his card elsewhere.

BOOTS, SHOES AND TRUNKS.—There is no doubt about your getting good boots, shoes and trunks at the old and reliable house of William Hogan, Nos. 99 and 101 Canal street.

OPTICIAN.—Mr. William Bohne, at No. 1 Carondelet street, may be relied upon, we think, as a competent and conscientious optician. If you want good glasses give him a call.

KID GLOVES.—Kreeger has just received a large supply of kid gloves, direct from Europe, of all the popular makes.

LAPLACE'S Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm, for the cure of throat and lung diseases, is advertised in to-day's paper.

THE CITY HOTEL, which has been so long presided over by Colonel Morse, the late proprietor, who was so universally respected by his acquaintances, has come under the management of Messrs. Mumford & Watson, who have been connected with the growth and popularity of the house, and have become thoroughly conversant with hotel management. We predict for them a successful and prosperous career. See their card in another column.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—Those who may wish to buy boots or shoes, or have them made to order by faithful workmen, are referred to the advertisement of Mr. C. Schneider, No. 330 Carondelet street, corner of Erato, manufacturer and dealer in boots and shoes, and who will attend to repairing, which will be neatly done.

WATCHMAKER AND JEWELER.—We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. P. S. Anderson, 133 Hampart street; who offers his services as a watchmaker and jeweler, and guarantees his work.

DR. WARRINGTON'S medical preparations are advertised in this issue.

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pill,

—Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

The Child's Corner.

HOW THE LEAVES CAME DOWN.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

I'll tell you how the leaves came down.
The great Tree to his children said:
"You're getting sleepy, Yellow and Brown,
Yes, very sleepy, little Red;
It is quite time you went to bed."

"Ah!" begged each sidy, pouting leaf,
"Let us a little longer stay;
Dear Father Tree, behold our grief,
'Tis such a very pleasant day
We do not want to go away."

So, just for one more merry day,
To the great Tree the leaflets clung,
Frolicked and danced, and had their way,
Upon the autumn breezes swung,
Whispering all their sports among:

"Perhaps the great Tree will forget
And let us stay until the spring,
If we all beg and coax and fret."
But the great Tree did no such thing;
He smiled to hear their whispering.

"Come, children, all to bed," he cried;
And ere the leaves could urge their prayer
He shook his head, and far and wide,
Flittering and rustling everywhere,
Down sped the leaflets through the air.

I saw them; on the ground they lay,
Golden and red, a huddled swarm,
Waiting till one from far away,
White bed-clothes heaped upon her arm,
Should come to wrap them safe and warm.

The great bare Tree looked down and smiled.
"Good night, dear little leaves," he said;
And from below each sleepy child
Replied, "Good night," and murmured:
"It is so nice to go to bed."

Stories of a Soldier.

We were talking the other day about a French grenadier. Here are some stories of a Russian soldier. Rather oddly, he died in the same year as Latour d'Auvergne—namely, in 1800.

During the last century Russia was a half-barbarous country; you know that it still contains great hordes of semi-civilized people. More savage than most of his fellows was Alexander Vasilleviteh Suwaroff, commander-in-chief of the Russian army. He was born in 1729, entered the army at the age of thirteen, and fought till the time of his death. Now you know just who he was. Personally Suwaroff was a dirty, pug-nosed little man, of whom every one stood in awe. He, though, was not afraid of anybody. Kings and peasants stood on a level to him. He had a grim humor of his own, but did not object if a smart fellow turned back one of his jokes on himself. He delighted to catch a man by asking him, unexpectedly, some such question as: "How many stars are there in the sky?" Very naturally, the bewildered soldier could make no reply. Once, however, the biter was bitten. I will tell you how it happened.

HOW MANY STARS ARE THERE IN THE SKY?

"On one occasion he put this question to one of his sentries on a bitter January night, such as only Russia can produce. The soldier, not a whit disturbed, answered coolly:

"'Wait a little and I'll tell you;' and he deliberately began to count: 'One, two, three,' etc.

"In this way he went gravely on to a hundred, at which point Suwaroff, who was already half frozen, thought it high time to ride off, not, however, without inquiring the name of this ready-reckoner.

"The next day the latter found himself promoted, and the story (which Suwaroff told with great glee to his staff) speedily made its way through the army."

It was not often that the general succumbed to the cold. His powers of endurance were remarkable, and his indifference to surroundings entire. He enjoyed astonishing strangers by his performances. Once, when he was an old man, he was sent to the court of Austria. For such a distinguished guest a very elegant room was prepared. As soon as Suwaroff walked into it he said: "Turn out the rubbish and shake me down some straw." While this was being done, the story goes, some one came in to see him.

SUWAROFF AND THE AUSTRIAN COURTIER.

"An Austrian grandee, who came to visit him, was startled at these preparations, and still more so at the first sight of the marshal's 'baggage,' which consisted of two coarse shirts and a tattered cloak tied up in a bundle.

"'Is that enough for winter?' asked the astonished visitor.

"'The winter is the father of us Russians,' answered Suwaroff, with a grin; 'besides, you don't feel the cold when you're riding full gallop.'

"'But when you're tired of riding, what do you do?'

"'Walk.'

"'But when you're tired of walking?'

"'Run.'

"'And do you never sleep, then?' asked the petrified questioner.

"'Sometimes, when I've nothing better to do,' replied Suwaroff, carelessly; 'and when I want to have a very luxurious nap I take off one of my spurs.'"

This man certainly had peculiar tastes. For one thing, he was fond of raw turnips. He was a soldier and nothing else. He was indifferent as to how much blood was shed, and once allowed thirty thousand Turks to be massacred. On the other hand, Suwaroff was exceedingly fond of his children. It is said that sometimes, when he was starting off on an expedition, he would leave the army and ride back a hundred miles in order to kiss his children once more. Now here is another story of him:

SUWAROFF AND THE SERGEANT.

"The generals of a division once sent home a sergeant with dispatches, at the same time recommending the bearer to Suwaroff's notice. The marshal, as usual, proceeded to test him by a series of whimsical questions; but the catechumen was equal to the occasion.

"'How far is it to the moon?' asked Suwaroff.

"'Two of your excellency's forced marches,' answered the sergeant.

"'From the enemy.'

"'How many fish are there in the sea?'

"'As many as have not been caught.'

"And so the examination went on, till Suwaroff, finding his new acquaintance armed at all points, at length asked him, as a final poser:

"'What is the difference between your colonel and myself?'

"'The difference is this,' replied the [illegible], 'that, if I could not make me a captain, but your excellency has only to say the word.'

"Suwaroff, struck by his shrewdness, kept his eye upon the man, and in no long time actually gave him the promotion."

You perceive, Nutcrackers, that we are speaking of a very eccentric personage. The Czar whom he obeyed was stranger still, as you may imagine from this anecdote. This Emperor, Paul the First, was so displeased with the bad riding of an officer at a review that he ordered the man to resign his commission and retire to his estate. But the unlucky officer had no estate to go to. "Then give him one," said the Czar, and he got it. In fact the Czar was crazy. For a trifle he disgraced Suwaroff just after ordering for him a triumphal entry into Moscow, and Suwaroff died from chagrin.

With one more story of a soldier and a king we will close our chat.

THE EMPEROR AND THE SERGEANT.

"Joseph the Second, Emperor of Germany, had a great dislike to any kind of outward show. One day, dressed in a simple riding-coat, the Emperor rode out in a small carriage to take an early drive in the suburbs of Vienna. He was overtaken by the rain as he was returning to the city. A pedestrian, also trying to regain the capital, made a sign to him to stop.

"'Sir,' said the soldier to him, for he was a sergeant, 'would there be any wrong in my asking for a seat? It would not inconvenience you, and it would save my uniform, which I have put on to-day for the first time.'

"'Pray take care of your uniform, and be seated. Where do you come?'

"'Ah!' replied the sergeant, 'I have just come from the house of a game-keeper of my acquaintance, where I have had a splendid breakfast.'

"'What have you eaten that was good?'

"'Guess!'

"'How am I to know? Was it beer-soup?'

"'Ah! well, beer-soup is good enough for some people, but what we had was much better than that.'

"'Perhaps you had sour-krout?'

"'Something far better than that.'

"'Oh, I have it! it was a loin of veal.'

"'Better than that, I tell you.'

"'Well, I really cannot guess any more!' said Joseph. 'What was it?'

"'What should it be but a pheasant, my worthy man! A most delicious pheasant! one that had been killed on the preserves of his majesty the Emperor!'

"'Taken from the Emperor's preserves!' said Joseph, in astonishment. 'It must have been all the better for that.'

"'I warrant you it was.'

"By this time they had neared the city, and, as the rain still continued to fall heavily, Joseph asked his companion where he should set him down. The sergeant named his house, and then asked the Emperor:

"'To whom do I owe so many benefits?'

"'It is your turn now,' said Joseph, 'to guess.'

"'You are a soldier?'

"'Certainly.'

"'A lieutenant?'

"'Ah, well! better than that.'

"'A captain?'

"'Better than that.'

"'A colonel, perhaps?'

"'Better than that, I tell you.'

"'How, then,' said the other, 'can you be a field-marshal?'

"'Better than that.'

"'Then,' cried the sergeant, in consternation, 'you must be the Emperor!'

"The frightened soldier entreated the Emperor to stop, in order that he might get down.

"'Oh, dear, no!' said Joseph. 'After having eaten my pheasant you would be only too happy to get rid of me as easily. I fully intend to take you as far as your house.'

"And the Emperor would not let him alight till he set him down at his own door."—Methodist.

PROTECTION BY PRAYER.—A little girl, about five years old, lived with her parents, who were very poor, in a small cottage in a village of Prussia. One day, when her father was out, little Rosa was sitting by her mother, who was just recovering from an attack of fever, which had weakened her very much. She was singing a little hymn, when the door opened suddenly, and six soldiers walked into the room. The poor child was so terrified at first that she fell from the bench on which she had been sitting. A few moments afterward, however, she rose to her knees, and in her own simple, childlike words, while the big tears trembled in her eyes, she prayed that God would pity them and help them; that he would make the soldiers kind to her mother, and tell them to go away to some other house where they might get something to eat and drink, and ending with these words: "For thou knowest, Lord, that we are very poor."

One of the soldiers patted the child's head kindly, and said: "Who taught you to pray so nicely, little one?"

"Jesus and mother," was her simple reply.

The soldier, a tall, strong, rough-looking man, turned aside his head and brushed a tear from his cheek; then, putting a piece of money in her lap, he kissed the little girl, and said to her kindly: "There is something for your mother, my child. Pray for us soldiers also, sometimes, like a good little girl, for we need prayer very much."

A few moments later little Rosa, who had rushed to close the door after the soldiers, was clasped in her mother's arm. And how gladly that mother thanked the Lord, who had so kindly protected them from harm and danger, in answer to the prayer of her dear child.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Falling Leaves.

"Leaves have their time to fall," but they are only a nuisance if left in the yards and on the sidewalks; but when gathered dry, and stored in the barn-[illegible], they add greatly to the value of the manure-pile in the spring.

A litter of leaves in the horse-stalls is more desirable than one of straw, for it can be renewed without the necessity of clearing out the stall more than twice or thrice a week. Besides, the leaves absorb the ammonia more rapidly than straw, and can be more thoroughly worked over and trodden into it; and they also make the manure of much more value for flower gardens, as they are particularly rich in phosphoric acid, which is, next to ammonia, the most highly-treasured constituent of plant growth.

Apply a bed of leaves plentifully around the roots of your vines, shrubs, roses, and all flowering trees, then throw a shovel of manure over them, and next spring will show how beneficial is their effect.

Aside from the practical use of leaves, a due regard to appearances should prompt us to gather them up from our door-yards and lawns, and put them in some place where they will not lie around loosely. Dame Nature ought to have an attic in which to put away her cast-off clothing, and not let the autumn winds scatter them broadcast; but she prefers that we should do her house-cleaning for her, and so we should attend to it directly and reap the benefits of our labors in another season. Pile them in one corner of the yard if there is no cow or horse to use them. Cover them with a layer of earth and turn all the house slops upon them; and another spring you will have a good supply of fertilizing material for your flower garden. Save the brightest and fairest, however, to adorn your sitting-room. Ours is already brilliant and beautiful with them.—New England Farmer.

PLASTER AND ASHES.—Once while riding in the cars we noticed on either side of the track for some distance a tract of almost barren sand, the only vegetation seen being now and then a sickly white birch and a little sorry-looking sorrel. Two gentlemen, evidently farmers, were talking of manures, when one said: "Do you know what would clothe those lands with a good crop of clover?" The other gentleman looked incredulous, and shook his head. "Well," continued his interrogator, "plaster and ashes will do it, for I have tried it on just such land, and at the end of the third year there was a heavy sward on it."

We did not forget the conversation, but went home and sowed a barren knoll over with plaster and ashes, and to our astonishment a good crop of clover came in, though we did not put on a grain of seed. We then tried the experiment on our pasture lands with marked success; so much so that we recommended it to our neighbors whose pastures were thin, and in three years the pasture land in that section would feed nearly double the stock that fed on them before.

Ashes in the neighboring village rose in price, and the farmers to-day buy all they can get at sixty and seventy-five cents per barrel, and find it pays well at that. We believe there is much land in Minnesota now almost worthless that will one day be made valuable by the use of plaster and ashes.—The Farmers' Union.

HABITS OF THE PLUM CURCULIO.—Prof. C. V. Riley writes that the plum curculio winters as a beetle above ground, so that all theories based upon its wintering in the ground are false. It shelters under the bark of trees, brush or any other rubbish, and hence is more injurious in timbered than in prairie regions. The burning of rubbish and underbrush around orchards destroys large numbers of them. It can fly; hence, though we stop it from crawling up, the tree will not be saved from injury. It is single-brooded, and, as a beetle, long-lived, the female living sometimes for more than a year, and oviposition during a period of several weeks. It is nocturnal rather than diurnal, and though during the season of egg-depositing the female may be found at work through the day, especially in cloudy weather, it generally keeps quiet and secluded. It may be trapped with chips, especially in the early part of spring, when it more invariably seeks shelter near the ground. This is done by the "Ransom chip process," first brought prominently before the peach-growers of the country by Mr. W. B. Ransom, of St. Joseph, Michigan. The process consists in laying pieces of chips or bark close to the ground near the trees. The curculios will take refuge beneath them at evening, and may be destroyed the next morning.

REMOVING GREASE-SPOTS.—In taking out grease from clothing with benzole or turpentine people generally make the mistake of wetting the cloth with the turpentine, and then rubbing it with a sponge or piece of cloth. In this way the fat is dissolved, but is spread over a greater space, and is not removed; the benzole or turpentine evaporates, and the fat covers a greater surface than before. The only way to remove grease-spots is to place soft blotting-paper beneath and on top of the spot, which is to be first thoroughly saturated with the benzole, and then well pressed. The fat is then dissolved and absorbed by the paper, and entirely removed from the clothing.

TO MAKE APPLE-BUTTER.—The best apple-butter is made by peeling, coring and slicing selected sweet apples and stewing them in sweet cider. Very little of this sort of apple-butter, however, comes to market. The bulk of that sold is made from second-rate apples, peeled, sliced and stewed, and sweetened with brown sugar. A large quantity of such butter is made and sold for ship stores for use by the sailors.

RENOVATING BITTERS!!

Purify the Blood.

STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all Bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Scientific.

DR. BURDON SANDERSON, in making some experiments on the electrical phenomena which accompany the contraction of the leaves of a sensitive plant, found the currents produced are subject in all respects to the same laws as those of muscles and nerves.

PROF. LECONTE, in the American Naturalist, in his paper on economic entomology, gives an instance in which all the caterpillars in a nine-acre piece of woods were destroyed by a disease which had been communicated to them by a sick silk-worm. The same principle might be used in destroying the cotton worm and others of like nature.

PROF. LOOMIS deduces from the weather reports of the last two years that the average rate of progress of a storm in January is 680 miles a day, and its average direction five degrees north of east; for February 740 miles, and a direction thirteen degrees north of east; March 940 miles, eleven degrees north of east; and for April 615 miles, sixteen degrees north of east.

THE exportation of vegetable hair from Algeria is continually extending. It is got from the dwarf-palm, and is employed for all the purposes of hair-cloth, and also in the manufacture of paper, etc. It is said to be now exported to this country. In England it is taking the place of esparto. The price is only two francs per hundred pounds at point of purchase.

HEALTHFUL TREE.—South Carolina papers are manifesting quite a good deal of interest in the Australian "disease-destroying tree," Eucalyptus globulus, which, according to a recent report before the British Academy of Science, has the singular property of absorbing ten times its weight of water from the soil, and emitting antiseptic camphorous effluvia. The Southern papers think the trees might make their lowlands healthy and inhabitable.

MAD-STONE TO CURE HYDROPHOBIA.—A lady of Richmond has one for which she paid $1,600, and which she permitted another lady to apply three times to a mad dog bite at the rate of $15 a time. Some three hundred persons have been cured by the stone, so that the owner has now an ample fortune, probably, and the price of mad-stones has gone up amazingly. We would like to see some evidence of the cures, boosted so largely.

THE government of one of the Argentine provinces has offered a liberal reward for the rediscovery of a mass of meteoric iron which is often cited as existing in a neighboring uninhabited region. It was first described in 1788 by two engineers who had been sent out by the government to investigate the truth of the Indian reports on the subject. The mass was estimated by them to weigh ninety thousand pounds. During the war of independence a portion of it was used for the manufacture of fire-arms.

RUBBER.—Vulcanized rubber-coated iron tubes are now manufactured in this city, which will bear over three hundred degrees of heat, the rubber being prepared at four hundred degrees Fahrenheit. The pipes can therefore be used for either hot or cold water. Gas and water are said to have no effect on them, and the coating resists sulphuric and muriatic acids and caustic potash solution. It is suggested that the process may be used for the preservation of iron ship plates and framing, if the rubber should resist the chemical action of copper in contact with iron under salt water.—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE common greenhouse Begonias have at length been produced in England with double flowers; and, as the genus is Monoecious, or has the male and female organs in separate flowers, it is a matter of special interest, as only the male ones are produced double, the female flowers being still in their normal condition. Thus we have a race of plants with double and single flowers on the same plants. Flowers become double, as it is properly termed, in some cases, by the production of latent axial buds between the petaline and staminate whorls, which become petals, and in others by the actual change of the stamens to petals. In the case of these Begonias the change is of the last-named character.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 12, 1874.

I am using SHEPARD'S PATENT STARCH GLOSS in the laundry department of my hotel, and consider it a very valuable acquisition. I would not dispense with the use of it for four times its value.

R. S. MORSE,
Proprietor City Hotel.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 12, 1874.

We have been using SHEPARD'S PATENT STARCH GLOSS in our laundry for more than three months past, and can say that it is decidedly the first article for the purposes for which it is recommended that we have ever used. We believe we have used everything of the kind in the market.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Mississippi river and bayous	10,979
Red river	1,443
Ouachita river	2,179
Railroads	6,737
Lake	78
Mobile	4,063
Texas	300
Total	25,779

On Saturday the market opened with a fair demand, and during the morning about 1,300 bales changed hands at full prices for good staple, while other descriptions ruled in favor of buyers, when the movement was interrupted by rain, but was subsequently resumed with increased spirit, and resulted in sales of 5,200 bales at firmer prices for good staple kinds, and easier for the general run of the offerings. On Monday the movement commenced with a fair inquiry, and at easier prices for the general run of the offerings, and as factors continued to meet the demand freely the day's business summed up 5,900 bales at irregular and occasionally lower prices for the general run of the offerings, while even, good staple kinds, although in most cases maintaining their previous position, occasionally exhibited less buoyancy. On Tuesday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but under a decline of 1-16d. in middling uplands at Liverpool, and 1-10@⅛ cent. in foreign exchange, buyers claimed further concessions, which in most cases factors were unwilling to grant. The sales during the morning were consequently confined to 1,800 bales, after which buyers and sellers came together more freely, and the entire business summed up 6,050 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,150 bales, against 17,450 for the corresponding time last week and 17,250 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 309,645 bales, against 267,388 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 275,043 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 156,827 bales to Great Britain, of 17,450 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 13,942 to France. We quote:

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year in want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1874. NO. 50.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 5.—The State of Ohio brought suit to-day against Hamilton county for the recovery of $66,000, being the amount of taxes belonging to the State and misappropriated by that county.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 7.—King Kalakana and suite left here this morning in a special palace car for Washington.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 6.—The final conference between the iron manufacturers and puddlers has failed. The result of the prolonged lock-out will be somewhat discouraging, as the failure of the two parties to come to an agreement will throw out of employment about forty thousand men, and seriously affect the iron and coal mining interests of the State.

CHARLESTON, Dec. 6.—Hon. F. Duncan, ex-chief justice of South Carolina, and the oldest lawyer in the State, died to-day. He was a native of Massachusetts.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—Two hundred and thirty-eight of the three hundred and one members of the House are present. Three new members were seated—Chittenden and Schell, of New York, and Carpenter, from South Carolina.

The President's message was read and listened to with unusual attention.

VICKSBURG, December 7.—Engagements took place this morning between the whites and the negroes on the various roads leading into the city. The negroes were repulsed and routed at all points, with the loss of eighteen or twenty killed and about the same number wounded.

Thirty or forty prisoners were captured and lodged in jail. One white man, Oliver Brown, of Snider's Bluff, was killed, Policeman Burton wounded, and George Batchelor accidentally shot through the foot. The citizens are still under arms, and the roads picketed. The excitement is subsiding. The town negroes took no part in the difficulty whatever.

VICKSBURG, Dec. 8.—It is reported this morning that the negroes will renew the attack on the city to-day. The citizens are all under arms and have been largely reinforced from the adjoining towns. Companies have been sent to the country well armed and equipped.

The prisoners captured yesterday are closely watched to prevent lynching. The negro loss yesterday is about seventy. One white man killed and two wounded. Crosby is still under guard. The whites hold the entire city.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Dec. 3.—Articles of amendment to the constitution, making changes in Congress, were solemnly promulgated as law in the land with the firing of cannon, ringing of bells and a grand military review by the President.

Debate is now progressing in Congress on a bill restricting the powers of the Catholic Church. One clause provides for a complete separation of Church and State, and another for the expulsion of the Sisters of Charity from the republic.

BUENOS AYRES, Dec. 3.—It is officially announced that General Mitre, having been defeated and finding himself closely pursued by the government forces, proposed terms upon which he would capitulate. His proposition was rejected, and he finally surrendered unconditionally with his army; and peace has been restored to the province of Buenos Ayres. The government troops are in pursuit of Arredondo, whose advance guard has been defeated.

ROME, Dec. 4.—The Pope has absolutely refused to recommend the bishops imprisoned in Brazil to resign their sees as a measure for the reconciliation of their differences with the government of that country.

BERLIN, Dec 4.—In the Reichstag to-day a letter from Bismarck was read. It announces in the name of the Emperor, and in accordance with the decision of Federal Council, that the sum for the maintenance of the German delegation to the Vatican is stricken out of the budget.

BERLIN, Dec. 7.—Bismarck, in the course of his reply to Windhorst, in the Reichstag, said: "I am in possession of conclusive proof that the Ecumenical Council was cut short on account of the Franco-German war council. The vote would have been very different had the French been victorious. I know from the very best sources that Napoleon was dragged into the war very much against his will by Jesuitical influences. He strove hard to resist these influences. At the eleventh hour he determined on peace, and kept his resolution half an hour, until he was overpowered by persons representing the Vatican."

ALWAYS speak the truth, but speak it in a pleasing manner. Truth is the picture; the manner is the frame that displays it to advantage.

Mr. Moody in Dublin.

The Rev. W. F. Steveuson, author of Praying and Working, says the Methodist, will be remembered as one of the most eloquent speakers at the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in this city last year. He gives in the Times of Blessing of November 7 a deeply interesting account of his impressions of Mr. Moody's work in Dublin:

"The afternoon meeting on Sabbath, when Mr. Moody gave his first address, was immense. For an hour and a half previous the streets presented an unwonted appearance, a constant stream of people pouring along every footway, and swelling the larger volume that flowed over the main avennes leading to the Exhibition Palace. Before the hour of service over eight thousand people had occupied every spot of ground available; and though more than half as many came later, they went away disappointed; a dense crowd, however, lingering round the building after the doors were locked. The multitude of this audience was gratifying, and so was its character. It was evident that numbers were prepared to hear, and that persons of every social station and religious persuasion were attracted.

"The noon prayer meeting has been very delightful; the quiet, the compactness of the worshipers, and the deep and remarkable earnestness contributing to this result. The numbers present have steadily increased, until even standing-room is not to be had. The incumbents of two of the Episcopal churches in the city have presided at two of the meetings, and Mr. Moody at two others, a Wesleyan and a Presbyterian taking charge of the rest; and the subjects have been those which Mr. Moody has suggested for common and universal use. There is thus a remarkable unity in prayer, and there are many who plead that there may be a remarkable concentration of the prayers of believers elsewhere upon Dublin. The requests have already grown so numerous that it has been found necessary not only to classify them, but to curtail them. They are full of reality, and often most pathetic. They include those whom the writers have persuaded to attend the meetings, the six thousand soldiers of the Dublin garrison, the ten thousand children of the Band of Hope in Ireland, Mr. Somerville's mission to India, many anxious ones, and many careless; therefore drunkards are numerous, and none are so frequent as those of mothers for their children. It is not only that God thus refreshes and quickens his people, but prayer is the spring of the movement, the beginning and quiet strength of the good to be done; and one evening assembly after another has been an answer to prayer.

There is not yet much direct result. There is unity. The Christian ministers of Dublin have never been so banded together. From twenty to thirty ministers of the Episcopal Church are at every service, and the other denominations are fully represented. Canon Daunt, who is probably the most influential minister of his communion in the city, has had congregational prayer meetings to commend the work to God. Many clergymen come from great distances to be present. All work cordially together, each anxious that his brother should have the pre-eminence, and each saying joyfully: 'Let brotherly love continue.'

"The work among inquirers is only begun; and though Roman Catholics do not appear among them, they are present, and sometimes in large numbers, at every evening service. Their principal organ among the newspapers has devoted almost a column every day to an account of the meetings."

Of the second week's work he says:

"The interest and attendance during the second week of meetings have steadily increased; indeed, the numbers present at every meeting are unprecedented in Dublin. The noon prayer meeting is crowded to excess, and the burden of the prayers asked is very touching; while their number has so rapidly increased that, as reading them through would occupy all the time, they are classified and grouped.

"During four days of the week there were Bible readings, at two o'clock, in the same building. The character of these fresh and delightful services was not understood at first, and the hall was thinner than at the previous meeting. But as Mr. Moody developed his plan the vacant places rapidly filled up, and on Friday the throng was as dense as at noon. The number of ministers attending these readings is a distinct feature of them, for they make up a very considerable part of the audience.

"The wonder of the meetings is, however, in the evening. Night after night every available room is occupied, and great numbers are content to wait in rain and wind outside the building so as to secure a seat when the doors open. There is not now such a thing as an empty place, and there are hundreds who must stand. The services have been deeply solemn. The sight of the sea of faces, seldom less than six thousand, turned from every point upon the speaker, and kept almost immovable while he declares his message, is itself overpowering; and the certainty that several of these persons have never heard the gospel of the grace of God plainly stated before, that many of them are the careless arrested only at the moment, that they are from every rank of life and every kind of household, that they are listening with a readiness for which they cannot account themselves, and that if not reached at the time they may not be again in a position to be reached—these are elements that gather a kind of awe about the services.

"A gentleman and his sister had traveled a long distance to Belfast. They had attended the meetings there, but avoided the inquiry meeting. They found no rest, and came on to Dublin, where they were among the inquirers; and soon tears of joy were pouring down the brother's cheeks as he caught Mr. Moody by the hand, saying: 'God bless you; it's all right now.' Roman Catholics have gone to the after meeting and thanked God for the light. 'I must go now and tell my mother about Christ,' one of them, a young man, said simply the other night. There is a fair attendance of Roman Catholics at the evening service, though those who go to confession are prevented from coming again, and put under penance for the previous transgression. But there is no general movement to prevent them, and a much-talked-of pastoral from Cardinal Cullen has never appeared.

"The general result so far is that the interest roused has spread very wide, that it continues to spread, that the meetings are the common and absorbing topic of conversation in both the city and the country, that those who held aloof are intending to see what it all means, and that the seed of the word is sown in a multitude of hearts more or less prepared for it.

"There has not as yet been the deep work of grace there was and is in Belfast. The populations of the two cities are very different, and each will be wrought on in a way probably distinct from the other. But there is need, none the less, that the hearts of the children of God be burdened with petition that the depth of the religious movement in Dublin may be even greater than its breadth."

From the Work.

GARLANDSVILLE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The ADVOCATE has not had news from this work this year. The reason is, we have had but little to tell. We have not held any of those gracious revivals with which other charges have been blessed. Yet I think a quiet, steady spiritual progress can safely be reported.

In the first of the year the church purchased a comfortable parsonage. They have also arranged a permanent camp ground. One of the stewards was the chief instrument in these works, yet his hand in the matter was invisible. Our collections have been small. The church property has increased about $1,000. Sixty-five accessions; twenty-one children baptized; $60 worth of books sold—how small! My excuse is, our people are too poor to buy books. Our people are too poor to buy books, yet I knew a steward of our church to sell about $400 worth of books, if I mistake not, in a few months. A local preacher took the agency for the same book and sold several hundred dollars' worth, I suppose. The work was written very adroitly in Baptist interests. These good brethren were aiding the Baptist cause unwittingly, of course. I knew a traveling preacher who sold in one year, I suppose, hundreds of dollars' worth of books, but not from our Publishing House. What is the matter? Are our books inferior and unsuited to our people? Do they cost too much? It is reported from many quarters that they are too high. Well, if the house receives the same kind of support from other parts of the field as I have described, it is not a matter of astonishment if the books are dear. Indeed it is somewhat astonishing that the house survives at all. Something is wrong somewhere. I compared the catalogues of our house with the price lists of one of those large cheap publishing houses North. I found the difference small; some books they sold cheaper than our house, others dearer. I was once interested in the publication of a small volume. I communicated with publishing houses in Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and with our house at Nashville, and I found I could make about as good an arrangement with Dr. Redford as with any of them. Now, in the face of this, I met a minister, a few days ago, who had a list of books made out, which he was about to order—something over $100 worth, I suppose. He told me he was informed by some of the brethren that he would save $30 or $40 by ordering from some other publishing house than our own. He decided he would write to Dr. Redford and to some Northern house, asking what it would cost to fill his order, and if the difference was slight he would patronize our own house. This brother remarked, and I thought very justly, that he was not able, with the usual salary of a Methodist preacher, to pay a bonus of $8 or $10 to the Publishing House for every $25 worth of books he might want. I hope the time is not distant when this matter will be fairly adjusted, and our ministers and people can heartily indorse our Publishing House.

Yours, etc., T. S. WEST.

Conference Items.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The fifth session of the North Mississippi Conference was held in Aberdeen, Mississippi, November 25 to December 1. Bishop Doggett presided—Bishop Paine present also, and in the chair during part of the session. It was a great pleasure to the presiding Bishop, and to the brethren all, to be favored with the presence of the venerable senior superintendent; and to him it was a great pleasure to welcome them to the city of which he is and has long been an honored and revered resident, and to his own delightful home, whose hospitalities many enjoyed during the session. There was a pretty full attendance of the members, clerical and lay—the absentees remarkably few, considering the distance many of the members reside from the seat of the Conference. But there were absentees who will be present with their brethren no more on earth—Leroy Massengale, Nathaniel Thomas, Robert Martin and Elias Jackson had passed away unto their great reward on high.

Eleven preachers were received on trial; fifteen remain on trial; four were discontinued; sixteen were admitted into full connection—one readmitted; three were received by transfer; fourteen traveling preachers were elected deacons—fourteen ordained; six local preachers were elected deacons—six ordained; nine traveling preachers were elected elders—nine ordained; two local preachers were elected elders—one ordained. Two preachers located; eight are supernumerary and nine superannuated. The characters of the preachers were all passed except that of William Shepherd, who was expelled; T. G. Ramsey was adjudged a reprimand, after which he was granted a location at his own request. The number of local preachers is 200—decrease, 12; white members of the church, 27,427—increase, 1,627; colored members, 2—increase, 2; deaths, 210; additions by baptism, 2,307—on profession of faith, 3,358; infants baptized, 1,176—increase, 370; Sunday schools, 212—decrease, 41; teachers, 1,184—decrease, 75; scholars, 8,509—decrease, 1,032; volumes in libraries, 14,464; churches, 397—value, $414,149; parsonages, 21—value, $22,480; value of other church property, $41,731. Expended for Sunday schools, $1,308.10; for building and repairing churches and parsonages, $14,978. Collected for missions in Sunday schools, $58.05—in churches, $1,741.90; the whole amount from all sources for missions was $2,542.40. Conference collection was $2,184.93, which, with other sums from interest, etc., made the amount distributed to superannuates and widows and orphans of deceased preachers, $2,263.35, the amount estimated at the previous session to be necessary for claimants being $3,381.25. Collections for Bishops' fund, $999.95. These figures, drawn from the tables of statistics reported to the Conference, are very suggestive.

The vote on the proposed change of the rule on temperance was: For the change, 45; against, 69.

The missionary anniversary exercises, appointed for Saturday night, were postponed, on account of rain, until Monday night. But in spite of the rain many people were in attendance on Saturday night, and Dr. McFerrin addressed them at length, and greatly to their edification. On Monday night the spacious audience-room of the Methodist church was crowded with people.

The amount contributed on the occasion was good for the times—nearly $350, of which $40 was contributed by the presiding elders, upon whom Dr. McFerrin called in person after the dismission of the congregation. He was determined that they, as well as all others, should have a fair chance to give to missions. We must not omit mention of Judge Sale's proposition to be one of any sufficient number to give $50 annually for the support of a missionary in Mexico. Let others whom God has blessed with large hearts and purses join the judge in behalf of this noble object. Best of all, the missionary anniversary was a religious occasion, interest in which was manifest in the fact that the people nearly all remained, as if chained to their seats, until a late hour.

Holly Springs District.—James D. Cameron, P. E. Holly Springs station, J. W. Lowrance; Holly Springs circuit, Hiram R. Caldwell; Early Grove and Carmel, John H. Scruggs; Byhalia station, James W. Honnoll; New Salem and Philadelphia, Thos. G. Freeman; Emory, Samuel M. Thames, P. J. Eckles, sup.; Marshall, Robert P. Mitchell; Ashland, Thos. Joyner; Salem, M. C. Pegues, B. D. Brown, sup.; Hudsonville and Sylvestria, Joshua K. Morris; Cornersville, Peter M. Marmon; Hickory Flat, James M. Mitchell; D. S. Hearon, principal of Holly Springs District High School.

Lowry; Okolona station, Thomas C. Wier; Okolona circuit, William D. Mathews; Houston, J. M. Hampton, James S. Carlton; Tupelo, Joseph B. Stone; Richmond, Samuel W. Miller; Saltillo, John McElhannon; Pontotoc, John F. Markham; Fulton, Peter Fleming; Thomas C. Wier, president of Verona Female College.

Macon District.—Robert G. Porter, P. E. Macon station, Wm. S. Harrison; Columbus station, Ephraim E. Hamilton; Columbus circuit, Henry E. Smith, T. N. Shelton; West Point and Tibbee, William L. Peebles; Line Creek, T. W. Castles; Starkville station, E. H. Moon; Crawfordsville, John H. Allen; Brooksville, J. T. Cunningham; Cooksville, A. W. Langley; Shuqualak, B. F. Morris; Perkinsville, J. O. Woodward; Louisville, J. G. Carlisle; Plattsburg, A. J. Foster; Lagrange, W. R. Ralney.

Grenada District.—Jos. H. Brooks, P. E. Grenada station, Tilmon Page; Grenada circuit, Hudson D. Howell; Water Valley station, Anderson B. Fly; Oxford station, John J. Wheat; Oxford circuit, A. A. Houston, J. H. Roberson; Eureka, J. W. Bates; Batesville, R. M. Davis; Charleston, W. J. O'Bryant; Coffeeville, G. W. Boyls; Banner, G. W. Bachman; Lafayette Springs, R. A. Ellis; Calhoun, B. H. Bounds; Bellefountain, L. D. Worsham.

Yazoo District.—Kenneth A. Jones, P. E. Black Hawk station, James L. Futrell; Winona and Carrollton, John C. Lowe; Winona circuit, T. C. Parrish; Vaiden, George D. Wade; Duraut, A. M. Barrington; Itichland, J. M. Boon; Attala circuit, W. S. Lagrone, W. M. Ross, sup.; Kosciusko and Bethel, W. P. Barton, A. R. Hines, sup.; Newport, John Mitchell, J. P. Commander, sup.; Liberty circuit, Joseph D. Newsom; Zilpha mission, W. W. Williams; Greenwood, John H. Mitchell; T. A. S. Adams, principal of Yazoo District High School; W. P. Bartou, principal of Kosciusko Methodist High School.

Transferred.—Philip Tuggle, Daniel L. Cogdell, to Los Angeles Conference; Archibald C. Allen, Reuben M. Powers, to North Texas Conference; James A. Peebles, to Arkansas Conference; Samuel R. Brewer, to Louisville Conference; James M. Owen, I. N. Reaves, M. L. Martin, to Northwest Texas Conference; F. A. Owen, to St. Louis Conference; Clarence J. Nugent, to Mississippi Conference.

Next Conference to be held at Kosciusko, Mississippi.

NORTH TEXAS CONFERENCE.

The North Texas Conference held its late session at Deutou, November 4-10, Bishop McTyeire presiding: W. A. Shook, secretary.

Six preachers were admitted on trial and nine into full connection; six received by transfer; seven traveling and three local preachers elected deacons; eight traveling and three local ordained; four traveling elected and ordained elders, and two local ordained; eleven superannuated, to wit: J. M. Baker, E. Couch, R. Lane, J. W. P. McKenzie, J. P. Stanfield, A. R. Dickson, A. Henkle, J. B. Rabb, A. Cumming, W. P. Reed, J. W. Fields. The total of white members reported is 17,633—last year, 14,953; local preachers, 183—last year, 183; infants baptized, 715—last year, 514; adults, 1,360—last year, 914. Sunday schools, 119—last year, 110; teachers, 665—last year, 651; scholars, 6,083—last year, 5,244. Necessary for claimants, $2,500; collected, $1,345—last year, $1,488.75. For missions, $1,924.96—last year, $1,118.05.

The vote on the change of the General rule was: Yeas, 32; nays 35. The following are the appointments:

Jefferson District.—John H. McLean, P. E. Jefferson station, William C. Halsip; Soda Lake circuit, Joel Osgood; Atlanta circuit, to be supplied (by Mat. T. Leach;) Linden circuit, John J. Davis; Kelleyville circuit, Samuel J. Hawkins; Dangerfield circuit, Thomas B. Norwood; Mount Pleasant circuit, Chas. E. Lamb; Gilmer circuit, James McDugald; Longview circuit, David F. Fuller; Coffeeville circuit, Joseph Parker, J. L. Terry, sup.; Whentville mission, William W. Horner.

Sulphur Springs District.—Mat. H. Neely, P. E. Sulphur Springs station, Thomas M. Smith; Sulphur Springs circuit, Wiley A. Shook, J. Clark Smith, sup.; Sulphur Bluff circuit, Calvin J. Cocke; Oakland circuit, John H. Law; Greenville circuit, Jarvis L. Angell; Lone Oak ct., Jeremiah F. Sherwood; Winnsboro circuit, Littleton F. Palmer; Pittsburg circuit, Robert P. Thompson, J. M. Stevenson, sup.; Emory mission, John C. Randall; Glade Water mission, Elias S. Boyd.

Kaufman Dist.—Lewis P. Lively, P. E. Kaufman circuit, Samuel Armstrong; Canton circuit, Eugene T. Bates; Edom circuit, Daniel T. Lake; Garden Valley circuit, John M. Langston; Cedar Grove circuit, Marshal C. Simpson; Pleasant Grove circuit, William K. Duff; Farmersville circuit, Edward B. Featherston; Rockwall circuit, Thomas E. Sherwood, A. H. Brewer, sup.; Gray's Prairie mission, Henry B. Swafford.

Paris District.—Lewis B Ellis, P. E. Paris station, B. J. Baldwin; Sylvan circuit, David M. Proeter; Itoxton circuit, Jas. Graham; Honey Grove circuit, John W. Pluer; Dodd City circuit, Richmond N. Brown; Ladonia circuit, James J. Coppedge; Robbinsville circuit, Jos. C Weaver; Clarksville circuit, Denton P. Haggard, Lafayette P. Smith; Boston circuit, Thomas J. Milam; Cooper mission, Francis M. Harrell.

Dallas District.—William F. Easterling, P. E. Dallas station, to be supplied (by A. C. Allen;) Dallas city mission, to be supplied (by R. M. Powers;) Dallas circuit, M. H. Cullom; Trinity circuit, George S. Gatewood, Hardy W. Hawkins; Bethel circuit, John Beverly, William E. Bates, sup.; McKinney circuit, William S. May; Denton circuit, Daniel J. Martin; Decatur circuit, Samuel S. Cobb; Grapevine circuit, Lewis M. White.

Sherman Dist.—John W. Chalk, P. E. Sherman station, Jacob M. Binkley; Sherman circuit, William M. Hobbins; Bonham circuit, Archibald C. McDougal; Savoy circuit, John R. Crowder; Pilot Grove circuit, Jonathan F. Denton; Pilot Point station, Mellville C. Blackburn; Pilot Point circuit, John B. Smith; Gainesville station, William C. Blair; Maryville circuit, William P. Petty; Whitesboro circuit, William H. Moss, I. N. Craven, sup.; Montague and Clay mission, Marcellus W. Shearon, James W. Hill.

Transferred.—James Y. Bryce, to Indian Mission Conference, and appointed to Caddo circuit; Richard W. Thompson, Saml. Morris, Joshua A. Miller, John W. Johnston, to East Texas Conference; Henry W. South, to West Texas Conference; James Grant, to Northwest Texas Conference, R. F. Stone, to Tennessee Conference.

Books and Periodicals.

SACRED DRAMAS. By Rev. James Boxer. Boston: Lee & Shepard, publishers; New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham.

Mr. Boxer has given us three dramas, to wit: Naaman the Syrian, The Finding of Moses, Jephthah's Daughter. Besides the irreverent use of Scripture, and the tendency to bring the word of God into contempt, these dramas are open to objection as mere travesties of sacred history, without a particle of literary merit. Profane trash and utterly worthless. A book to be let alone.

MISCHIEF'S THANKSGIVING, AND OTHER STORIES. By Susan Coolidge. With Illustrations by Addie Ledyard. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1874.

Some of these stories are good; others—Christie, for instance—very thin and gruelish. The illustrations are well executed. Type and binding beautiful. It is an entertaining book for children. For sale by Kain & Co., New Orleans.

A handsome volume for the children. The stories are wholesome, well told and fascinating. The illustrations are remarkably good. The volume is a 12mo, 238 pages, tinted paper, and elegantly bound. Our copy is from the publishers, through Kain & Co., of New Orleans.

This work is in general use, we believe, in our public schools, and is regarded as among the best.

OUTLINES OF ASTRONOMY. By Arthur Searle, A. M. Boston: Ginn Bros., 1874.

Mr. Searle is assistant at Harvard College observatory, and his position and reputation indicate his capacity for the production of a work of superior merit. The spectroscope occupies one of the most interesting chapters in the book. The arrangement is excellent, and the method all that can be desired. The work embraces all the latest discoveries of astronomical research.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for December is handsomely illustrated, and offers a tempting table of contents. It has: The New Hyperion continued, A Tourist's Paradise, Physical Effects of Emotion, Hung and Unhung, Sketch of the Political Life of the Late Lord Lytton, and other articles.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR for December is a good number of this always excellent periodical. Published at Athens, Georgia, at $2 a year.

PETERS' MUSICAL MONTHLY for December is to hand, and filled, as usual, with new and excellent music.

OLD TIMES.

There's a beautiful song on the slumberous air
That drifts through the valley of dreams;
It comes from a clime where the roses were,
And a tuneful heart, and bright brown hair
That waved in the morning beams.

Soft eyes of azure, and eyes of brown,
And snow-white foreheads are there;
A glimmering cross and glittering crown,
Lost hopes and leaflets of prayer.

A rosy leaf in a dimpled hand,
A ring and a plighted vow:
Three golden rings on a broken band,
A tear and a sinless brow.

There's a tincture of grief in the beautiful song
That sobs on the summer air,
And loneliness felt in the festive throng
Sinks down in the soul as it trembles along
From a clime where the roses are.

We heard it first at the dawn of the day,
And it mingles with matin chimes;
But years have distanced the beautiful lay,
And its melody floweth far away,
And we call it now "Old Times."

Church Membership.

MR. EDITOR: In your paper of October 1 I notice another communication from Bro. S. P. Richardson, with the above heading, in which he tells us: "We are discussing not the nature of man so much as his relation." And yet he pursues the same line of thought adopted in his first article on the above subject, viz.: "That God did not create Adam morally holy; and that children are born in grace, or in Christ, or in the church." Now if this is not the utterance of a theory upon the original and present condition of man, I cannot comprehend his meaning. To these two points we entered and do still enter some objections, not in the spirit of controversy, but for light.

To my mind "the image and likeness of God," after which man was created, consisted not merely in what divines call "the natural image of God in his creatures," but especially and peculiarly in the moral image of God, involving "knowledge, righteousness and true holiness." This, I think, is the Methodistic view of the subject, as may be seen by consulting Watson's Theological Institutes, part 2, chapter 18, on the fall of man.

Now, admitting that Adam was not created in the moral image of God, what, I ask, did he lose by the fall? Not moral holiness, of course, for according to this view he had none to lose. He could not lose the natural image. Hence he lost nothing, unless we admit a slight weakening of his natural image. The transition from this view into the theory that the descendants of Adam are born "in Christ," and therefore but slightly depraved, if depraved at all, would be natural and easy. Such a notion certainly does not harmonize with the teachings of Scripture as to the degree of guilt charged upon Adam when he fell, and the dreadful consequences which followed. The argument used by Bro. Richardson to blot holiness out of man's original constitution—viz.: "that the acting force would be God, and not man; and therefore the holiness would be the actor's, and not the thing acted upon"—would blot not only holiness but the whole creation of God out of existence, or else make them a part of God himself, which is pantheism.

We hold that holiness is a creation as well as a relation—a created state as well as an exercise. The mind of man is a unit, and it is impossible for us to separate the moral quality of volitions or actions from the moral quality of the mind or agent putting forth these volitions or actions. When we judge of the character of men we go back of the outward act, and look at the agent in the act. If you would know the moral state of any one you must get at the heart. "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." If the inward springs of human thoughts and actions be pure, the thoughts and actions themselves will be pure; otherwise they cannot be. "Make the tree good, and the fruit will be good. Make the fountain pure, and it will send out pure water." An intelligent being like man must be in a morally right state before he can exercise a holy thought or perform a holy action. Now we hold that God did create Adam in just such a state; otherwise he never could have had a holy thought or performed a holy act. We cannot conceive how Adam could have even been capable of working out holiness for himself had he not been originally endowed with moral purity. He would have been like a man trying to walk, with no legs to walk with.

On the moral image of God in man Mr. Watson has the following: "However the image of anything may be limited in extent, it must still be an accurate representation as far as it goes. The goodness—that is, the perfection—of every creature, according to the part it was designed to act in the general assemblage of beings collected into our system, wholly forbids the idea that the image of God's moral perfections in man was a blurred and dim representation. To whatever extent it went, it necessarily excluded all that from man which did not resemble God; it was a likeness to God in "righteousness and true holiness," whatever the degree of each might be. Man, therefore, in his original state, was sinless, both in act and principle."—Watson's Dictionary, under the word Adam. I know that man does not now possess this image. It has been lost by transgression. Human nature in this respect resembles some grand old temple in ruins. Still there is evidence in the very ruins themselves, especially when the light of revelation pours in upon them, that holiness was once the crowning ornament of the building. Thank God it may be regained through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus.

A few thoughts on man's present condition will close this article, already too long. That man's natural existence has been secured to him by virtue of the atonement of Christ there can be no question. "In him we live, move and have our being." The resurrection, both of the righteous and the wicked, is based upon the same fact. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." But this does not affect, in the least, the moral condition in which men are born into the world. The notion that they are "born in grace, or in Christ, or in the church, and that Christ is the church," cannot be sustained either by reason or Scripture. If a man, by his natural birth, is also born in grace, or in Christ, or in the church, and there is no way for him to get out but to sin out, of course, being at the very instant of his birth in Christ, he is not, he cannot be a sinner, in any sense, until he becomes one by sinning out. Now, unless he must necessarily sin out, may we not suppose he might never sin out? In which case you might carry a man to heaven without repentance; for, having never sinned out of Christ, he would have no sins to repent of. He would not need faith in order to justification and the new birth; for, being already in Christ, born in Christ, he would be already justified and regenerated. In other words, you would save this man by his own works. And if one may do this, might not all?

Adam, having corrupted himself by the fall, could not propagate any other than a corrupt, depraved and wicked race—the stream could rise no higher than the fountain. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." The above Scriptures clearly indicate that the corruption naturally engendered of the offspring of Adam fastens upon and cleaves to all men, infants included.

I base the salvation of all infants dying in infancy upon precisely the same principle I do that of adults; not upon baptism, but the atonement of Christ. "Therefore, as by the offense of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Romans v, 18. The meritorious cause of salvation is the same. The only difference is that adults, being personal offenders, are required to comply with the conditions of salvation. Infants are not. In both cases the heart must be renewed and sanctified. The Holy Spirit effects this work in the heart of each, and I do not know that there is any very great difference in the modus operandi of this grace in either case. How it is done we are not required to explain. That it must be done is clear: "Except a man be born again" (born of the Spirit) "he cannot see the kingdom of God."—John iii, 3.

Parents should have their children brought into the church by baptism, because they were embraced in the original constitution of the church: Not that baptism changes their sinful nature, any more than it does that of an adult, but it puts them into the school of Christ to be trained up in the fear of God.

I do not write to criticise Bro. Richardson's theory, nor to charge his views as heretical. I know him to be a good man and true. He aims right. Still I fear his theory and the doctrine of the native depravity of infants are not easily reconciliable.

The Ninth Chapter of Romans.

MR. EDITOR: As this chapter is apt to perplex the mind, especially of one who has not heard or read any such expositions of it as are to be found in our standard theological works, it may not be amiss to place before your readers a few suggestions in elucidation of some of its difficulties. Many, we fear, are accustomed to excuse their unfaithfulness or justify their disobedience by assuming a doctrine of predestination which makes God the author of men's sins. Some think they find this doctrine taught in the Scriptures, particularly in the ninth of Romans.

The key to the chief difficulties of this chapter is, we think, to be found in a proper apprehension of the subject treated—the scope and design of the apostle's argument. If we suppose the subject to be personal and unconditional election to eternal life, the chapter is full of darkness, injustice and contradictions of other portions of the Scriptures. If, on the other hand, we take the subject to be the selection of an individual, a family, a nation, to be the recipients of God's covenant, his law and his promises, with a view to establishing among them a holy people—a church, which should finally under his direction be extended over the whole earth—then is this portion of God's word full of light, consistency and beauty.

The Jews had erroneously concluded that the kingdom of God on earth was to be exclusively and perpetually theirs. They believed that the Gentiles had and could have no part or lot in the inheritance. But God had determined to bring the Gentiles into an equal participation in all the blessings of the kingdom. The apostle in this chapter undertakes to show that the Jews had wholly misunderstood the divine plan. Though God selected Abraham, not all his posterity enjoyed the peculiar and necessarily exclusive privilege of being the ancestors of the Messiah. Nor were all the natural descendants of Abraham his spiritual children. In Isaac the seed (Christ) was to be called, and they are not all Israel that are of Israel. Isaac was preferred to Ishmael, Jacob to Esau, and Judah to all his brethren, as the progenitors of Christ. These selections were acts of pure sovereignty on the part of God. Before the children were born he chose Jacob in preference to Esau, which is all that is meant in the Hebrew by the words translated hated and loved. God also predicted the relative positions of their posterities. Jacob's would be superior to Esau's. So it was. Esau's descendants were always more wicked than Jacob's; and, though inferior to them politically, were never in actual bondage to them, but were dependent upon them for whatever knowledge of God they acquired, till they finally became so wicked as to provoke God utterly to destroy them. But it may be asked: Why should Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and their successors be selected as the recipients of the covenant, the law and the promises, and to be the progenitors of Christ? We answer that if God's will was to be made known to men, it must have been communicated by some plan. The Holy Spirit must have imparted a knowledge of it to each man individually, or the angels must have preached it, or some men must have received it first and then made it known to others. If Christ was to come in the flesh, and to be predicted, some line of individuals must needs have been designated as his ancestors. God, in the exercise of his sovereignty and wisdom, selected Abraham to receive the promises and to be the first-named progenitor of Christ. Some one of earth's inhabitants must, from a natural as well as a mathematical necessity, have been selected. Why not Abraham as well as any other? But what has this to do with the case under discussion? Simply this: If God, in the unquestionable exercise of his sovereignty, chose to confer special fiduciary blessings upon Abraham and a part of his posterity (for all his posterity were never included in the covenant) then, you Jews need not now conclude that the word (promise) of God hath taken none effect (failed) because he now brings in the Gentiles and makes them equal with you in all the privileges of the kingdom. As all Abraham's posterity were not included in the original covenant, so not they only are to be embraced now. If God excluded some then, he but acts on the same principle of sovereignty in including others now. The argument is illustrated and enforced by the power of the potter over the clay. If one vessel be marred (see Jeremiah, chapter 18) in the hands of the potter, he will make another of the clay. So God dealt with the Jews, sending them into Babylonish captivity. As no sane potter would mar a vessel intentionally, so God could never wilfully dishonor his people. If the potter failed to make the vessel he intended, there was fault in the material, and he could not. So God declares he could do no more for Israel than he had done. When, finally, they had wilfully fitted themselves for destruction, their fate is typified by the breaking of an earthen bottle by the prophet.—See Jeremiah xix. The old bottle of Jewish mold would not hold the new wine of the gospel. Hence it was broken. But no man was either saved or lost by any of these acts of God's sovereignty. Gospel privileges were offered to some, and taken away from those who would not improve them. God says to the Jews: "Is thine eye evil because I am good? I will give unto this Gentile even as unto thee."

"These Men are Full of New Wine."

ACTS II, 13.

This is the criticism of people professing to be lovers of God, the cause thereof being a manifestation of the Spirit of God, but in a way so different from their ideas of religious propriety that they took offense. Their own people, with many strangers also, appeared before them in such a dress of enthusiasm as that their prim formalism was shocked. Surely they are under the influence of new wine. Such a departure from the ways of the forefathers is not in accordance with prescribed rule, and those who heed these new teachers will awake by and by to the fact that they were deluded. Beware, ye children of Abraham! Suffer not this extravagance of religious fervor to seduce you from the good old way. Hear attentively the reading of the law and the prophets, wait upon the ordinances, drink in the "golden words" of our learned and holy rabbis, but shun these innovators. You have been carefully trained in the ways of holiness after God's method, and we your teachers have been careful to observe the apostolic rule: "Let all things be done decently and in order." The kingdom of God is not to be entered by any such way. If you suffer the appeals of these men to stir your passions, and under this sort of excitement suppose you have found the "pearl of great price," be persuaded that you are deceived.

Are these supposed thoughts of the formal lookers-on at Jerusalem, upon the occasion which gave birth to the text, unnatural? In our own times do we not hear similar remarks from those who, no doubt, are true believers? Brethren, it is only too true. Our churches are full of prim formalists. It will not do to ruffle their serene propriety, lest they become angry. You must not introduce anything into your method of service that is contrary to antique usage. In case you do, at once the spirit of review is aroused. The so-called revivals resulting from the labors of Wesley, Whitefield, Finney, Burchard, Baker, Hammond and Moody are taken as illustrations, and more is made over the few who go back to the world than over the many who remain steadfast. The very men who are the instruments in these awakenings are looked upon with suspicion, and their labors with cold indifference. It is useless to urge that in their method a larger class of people are reached, and consequently the issues of eternity brought home to them. The whole thing is not in keeping with the standards. There is too much of acting, far too much manipulation. The word of God and the Spirit are the divine means of grace; and if men will not hear the one and be guided by the other, so much the worse for them. Any means, other than those venerable with age, which leads men to desire to hear, and thus open the way for conviction of sin through the influence of the Holy Spirit, are not to be countenanced by the solid and system-trained believers. But is this the rule men work by in the affairs of time? In great emergencies, do the leaders of men follow the rules of schools or logic or frilled propriety? Not so. Every appeal is made to arouse the careless, the indolent, the dreamy; and he who uses any means to secure the end in view, to bring life into the mass, is counted worthy of honor among men. If in earthly things enthusiasm be good, how much more in the matter of the soul? If thoughts that breathe and words that burn are good as means in the one case, by how far more are they proper in the other? Polished rhetoric, like a linen dress in summer, is delightful, but it is not suitable for winter's cold. Stately formality may do for a professor of the exact sciences, but it would hardly save a drowning man. Forms and ordinances may do for those who have been brought to realize their worth, but the great point is to get the human soul to feel that it is poisoned with sin, and that nothing short of repentance for the same, and faith in Christ as the only Savior from sin, will answer the demands of God. Now, this being the great point, shall men scorn and reject the means which puts the soul on the serious consideration of its danger, because something out of the ordinary method is used to arouse attention? It cannot surely be. Staid propriety may command the attention of some, but the great mass can only be moved by violent measures. A man of serene temper will hear the truth and be influenced thereby under the masterly reasoning of one who moves in a measure suited to his disposition; another needs some display of the stormier elements of our nature to start him from his sleep. The glories of heaven may lead a few to seek an inheritance there, but the horrors of hell move more in the same direction. Let us beware how we judge in this matter. If God honors a man as an instrument in leading souls to Christ, who has the temerity to turn such a one away? Rather let us hide our childish prejudices, and welcome the servant who opens salvation's stream to the thirsty.

Stumbling-Blocks.

MR. EDITOR: I hope you will allow me a small space in your valuable paper to give the members who seldom go to church a gentle reminder of their duty. Some have one excuse, some another. Some do not go to church because they do not like some of the members; others do not do right, and so on. Well, suppose some do not do right. Does it justify them to stay at home? I think not. It is their duty to go and talk to them, persuade and influence them to do better. They will never help the cause of religion by staying away from the house of God. Is that a Christian spirit? They who stay away from church are equally as bad as those who do wrong. If we profess to be followers of our Savior we must go to church, not to help save the just, but to save the unjust. It is our duty to go to church on the same mission that Christ came into the world, namely: to save the unjust. Others say: "My horses are tired, and it is too hard on them to stand up at church all day." But let some public meeting come off, or the grange—the thought never occurs to them about horses being tired. They frequently keep them standing up all day, and sometimes all night. Can such members of the church be called members. Others do not go because they think they are as good as Mr. and Mrs. So-and-So. I will assure them no one else thinks so. It is poor consolation to be good in one's own conceit. Can the church prosper with such members? Others say: "I have nothing to wear." This excuse will not do. I have seen such persons at public meetings and picnics, and dressed as fine as the rest; some dress finer than those who have plenty. My friends, this will not do. We must do better if we expect to have preaching. We must all go to church and do our duty. Our pastors feel much better to preach to a good congregation than to a dozen or two, which is too frequently the case in our country churches. Parents are not strict enough with their children in this matter. They are too apt to give away to little excuses, and the consequence is that when they grow up they will become non-attending members. Always start to church in time, so that when you get there you can hear the preacher's text, and not be compelled to ask some one else. These little excuses never will work for our good. We must not allow ourselves to get in the habit of making an excuse for every occasion. We must be members, and punctual members, if we wish Christianity to prosper and our churches to be built up.

CANE RIDGE.

FALSE REPORTS.—My friends advised me, said Mr. Frazer, if ever I took a house in a terrace, a little way out of town, to be very careful that it was the center one—at least if I had any regard for my reputation. For I must be well aware that a story never loses by telling; and consequently, if I lived in the middle of a row of houses, it was very clear that the tales which might be circulated to my prejudice would only have half the distance to travel on either side of me, and therefore could only be half as bad by the time they got down to the bottom of the terrace as the tales that might be circulated of the wretched individuals who had the misfortune to live at the ends of it; so that I should be certain to have twice as good a character in the neighborhood as they had. For instance, I was informed of a lamentable case that actually occurred a short time since. The servant at No. 1 told the servant at No. 2 that her master expected his old friends, the Bayleys, to pay him a visit shortly; and No. 2 told No. 3 that No. 1 expected to have the Bayleys in the house every day; and No. 3 told No. 4 that it was all up with No. 1, for they couldn't keep the bailiffs out; whereupon 4 told 5 that the officers were after No. 1, and that it was as much as he could do to prevent himself being taken in execution, and that it was nearly killing his poor dear wife; and so it went on increasing and increasing until it got to No. 32, who confidently assured the last house, No. 33, that the Bow street officers had taken up the gentleman who lived at No. 1 for killing his poor dear wife with arsenic, and that it was confidently hoped and expected that he would be executed.

Obituaries.

DIED, in Algiers, on the seventh of November, 1874, in the full triumph of the truth of the glorious gospel of the blessed God, Bro. LOUIS TODZWER, in the fifty-ninth year of his age. In his history was verified the truth of that passage in the Psalms: "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way."

When about twenty-one years of age, from the town of Blois, France, where he was born, May 21, 1816, the Lord directed his feet to the shores of America, and in the winter of 1837, having been preserved from the perils of the ocean, he was landed safely in New Orleans. But a still further interposition of the divine guidance brought him, during the following summer, to the city of Baltimore, where on his pilgrimage he permanently tented, and, renouncing his allegiance to his mother country, he formally became a naturalized citizen of the United States.

But he was the subject of another power—though usurped, was ruling and controlling him—of which he was profoundly ignorant, the devices of which, however, were perfectly understood by him who was ordering his steps. This power, too, was to be renounced and broken off, for he was no longer to be a stranger and foreigner, but to be adopted into the kingdom of Christ, and constituted a fellow-citizen with the saints and of the household of God. As instruments for the accomplishment of this great and glorious work, the Lord honored his chosen people—the Methodists. Bro. Todzwer's first visit among them seemed to be, humanly speaking, accidental; for passing, one evening, old Wilks Street church, where a revival meeting was going on, he entered with the congregation, supposing it to be a Catholic church (with whose worship he was perfectly familiar, having been trained in its faith, and when a boy was employed in waiting on his uncle and other priests in the performance of the church service,) and did not perceive his error until he had gone in, and, being tolerant and respectful, he remained during the service, and was so favorably impressed with the earnest zeal and devout manner of the worshipers that the kind brethren found no difficulty in inducing the young French Catholic to repeat his visits; and perceiving that they were sincere in the interest which they manifested for him, and that they cared for his soul, he readily chose them for his people, and their God as his God, and took up his abode with one of the brethren, thus coming out from and separating himself from the world; and among the fair daughters of this excellent people he found a suitable helpmate in the person of Miss Sarah Johnson, to whom he was married on the ninth of August, 1840. Very soon after his marriage he gave himself more fully to the Lord by joining the Methodist Church. During a revival meeting held in the church above mentioned in 1841—about a year after his marriage—he was soundly converted to God, realizing for himself a full and entire absolution of all his sins, and receiving the Spirit of adoption, the Spirit itself bearing witness with his spirit that he was a child of God; and with his soul filled with the love of God, with confidence he could write back to his kindred in France, telling them that in America he had found brethren and sisters and mothers and children, and the promise of eternal life in the world to come. The evidence of his acceptance with God he retained until he entered upon the full fruition of his glorious hope, exulting in a consciousness that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin; and in this bright assurance triumphantly praising God, and as well as his fast-failing strength would allow, sang, among other hymns:

"How happy are they who their Savior obey,
And have laid up their treasures above!"

He constantly desired that his children who were absent might return before his death, frequently calling the name of one who had been telegraphed to and was hourly expected. It was an affecting scene, the gathering of his family into his room at his summons, to receive his dying blessing, counsel and exhortation; and the promises which they all made him gave fresh comfort to his own soul.

Bro. Todzwer appreciated the many Christian advantages with which the children of the United States are eminently blessed, and very much regretted the want of such facilities in his own early training. Of the sweet lessons of the Bible he knew nothing, neither of Sunday school instruction, until his acquaintance with the Methodists in Baltimore. Among them he learned to appreciate God's word, and with one heart and mind to glorify God. The light which he received was so transcendently great and glorious above anything he had before known that he was inspired to become a zealous worker in the church, and served in the various offices of the Sunday school, both in Baltimore and New Orleans.

After an absence of twenty years he returned to the last-named place to enjoy the benefit of its milder climate, and with his family settled in Algiers (now the Fifth District of New Orleans,) where he promptly identified himself with the church, taking an active part in her enterprises. He was superintendent of the Sunday school for many years, only resigning that office about eighteen months ago, on account of feeble health; and up to his last illness he filled acceptably the offices of trustee, steward and class-leader, and the church feels and mourns the loss of so faithful a Christian brother.

Truly it may be said that Bro. Todzwer's house was set in order. While he was fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, he was diligent in business. With the greatest care he arranged his temporal affairs, attending to the minutest details, even to the having the family tomb in readiness. He took great satisfaction in expressing to his family the settled condition of his affairs, and his entire freedom from debt—that he had paid all of his bills and did not owe any one a dollar.

The crowded church at his funeral manifested the high estimation in which he was held by the citizens of the community in which he has resided for the last fourteen years.

In him we can behold the perfect man, and his end—peace. May the Lord sanctify this dispensation of his providence to the good of this community, and support and sustain his family by his grace; for which I pray in Jesus' name.

LEWIS A. REED.

LINA BROOKS, granddaughter of D. K. and Emiline Gaitney, died near Sharon, Madison county, Mississippi, July 23, A. D. 1874.

Lina, just budding into youth, with the freshness and beauty, innocence and purity of childhood wreathed upon her gentle brow, was seized by the cruel hand of death and borne forever from our midst. The circumstances were peculiarly adapted to render her doubly dear to the fond hearts that clung to her in all the strength and tenderness of parental affection. When only two years of age she was deprived of the tender care and fond love of a mother, who, in the beauty and loveliness of young motherhood, was removed from earth; and only a few weeks later the fond father and affectionate husband, with his heart full of grief and sorrow for his departed companion, in a far distant State, fell upon the battle-field, a noble martyr to a glorious cause, thus leaving his little Lina to the care and protection of her grandparents. Their home she knew and loved as her own.

Lina's early training was committed to her aunt, whose love for her was that of a sister, and whom she was taught to regard as such. How faithfully the duties devolving upon her were performed was fully shown in the happy results of her earnest and devoted endeavors.

Her disease at first did not seem severe; but, alas! it had taken a fatal hold, as if intent to do its work, and all that mortal aid could do was impotent to redeem her from the attack. She bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude; and when, at last, all hope was lost, and she was told she must die, she said: "Yes, I am dying. I am going to my Savior, whom I love so well." Then in a song of sweet accord she raised her dying voice, and, bidding her loved ones "come to the Savior" and meet her in heaven, she sweetly breathed her last, while the flush of youth was still fresh on her brow, and a heavenly smile lingered on the silent lips. Oh, what an hour of Christian triumph!

Dear aged ones, ere long, like Lina, you must bid adieu to earth and follow to the grave. Will you meet her in that land where, with the loved ones of your household who have gone before, you may live in eternal glory?

THE following is the report of a committee appointed to draw up a preamble and resolutions for Vernon Sabbath school, in memoriam of the death of one of its members, viz., Miss EMMA RUSH:

Whereas, The great Author of goodness and mercy, who doeth all things well, has seen fit, in his infinite providence, to remove from the membership of this Sabbath school and from our midst our highly-esteemed sister and friend, Miss Emma Rush; And whereas, In the death of our sister and friend Vernon Sabbath school has lost one of its most active and devoted members, and the community one of its most exemplary Christians; thus another flower, in the freshness of its pristine beauty, has been plucked away and transplanted in the garden of paradise; And whereas, She will never again mingle her voice with ours in the Sabbath school; but by following the example she has left, and living the pure and virtuous life she lived, we will meet her again, and mingle our voices with hers in the heavenly choir "around the great white throne;" therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Vernon Sabbath school, That while we deeply mourn the untimely death of our sister, friend and associate, we bow with due reverence to the divine will of our Father and our God, recognizing his goodness and mercy in calling to himself the fair and the young, as well as the feeble and the aged.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere sympathies to the bereaved family, relatives and friends of the deceased, and in this their bereavement we would point them to him who hath said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be handed to the family of the deceased sister, and also that a copy be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

Respectfully submitted by the committee.

VERNON, ALA., October 25, 1874.

DEPARTED THIS LIFE, in Georgiana, Butler county, Alabama, on the seventeenth of October, 1874, Miss MARY ETTA MATHEWS, in the eleventh year of her age. At a regular meeting of Georgiana Sabbath school, held November 15, 1874, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That in this sore bereavement the Georgiana Sabbath school has lost a very interesting and much-respected member.

Resolved, That while we feel deeply grieved to have one of our number so unexpectedly taken from our school, we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we earnestly sympathize with the relatives of our deceased little sister.

Resolved, That these resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

COLEMAN O. GWYNN,
MISS MARY A. SHORES,
MISS KANSAS N. LAWLIS,

WINTER.

Hail! monarch of the leafless crown,
Rare seen save with a gloomy frown,
With ice for scepter, robes of snow,
Thy throne—the stream's arrested flow;
Stern tyrant! whom the hast'ning sun
Doth loathe to serve, by vapors dun
Begirt, a melancholy train.
O'er Nature holding saddest reign.
Lo! of thy rigor birds make plaint,
And all things 'neath thy burden faint,
Nor cheered are they by message cold,
In answer by the north wind told,
The envoy of thy grievous sway,
When thou wouldst drive all hope away
From Nature, yearning to restore
To earth the bliss it knew before,
When Summer ruled with empire mild,
And Autumn, still a ruddy child,
Lay cradled 'mong the greenery
Of whisp'ring grove and laden tree.
The brook that prattled to the air
Of golden harvests, scenes as fair
As poet rapt in fancy's maze
Could scarce enshrine in mortal lays,
Now rude and angry hurls along
The bearers of his summer song—
The branch and leaf that once repaid
His music with their tender shade,
And, catching Zephyr's honey'd tone,
To his sweet tuning joined their own.
Or bound, perchance, in durance slow,
Fast faint he wends, and moaning low,
Fit dirge he makes o'er freedom lost,
In joy of which he wanton tossed
The falling blossoms on his wave,
For water-nymphs to catch and save.
Now stript of his green bravery,
In piteous plight the weary tree
Is blown upon by mocking winds,
Whom changed now the sighing finds
From those gay playmates welcomed erst
In glee by his young leaves when first
They wave their merry, breeze-taught dance,
And broke their feathered lodgers' trance,
What time the eastern wave did gleam
'Neath fore-feet of the golden team.
Not busy now with tender care,
For coming brood the birds prepare
Their airy cradle, rocked unseen
By Dryad hands behind the screen
Of leafy curtains, where no eye
Of mischief curious may pry.
The thrush that erst with swelling voice
Made all the tangled brake rejoice
In echoes of his mellowed strain,
To rope in silence now is fain;
Nor ever pipes from straining throat
The varied wonders of his note.
So bleak the scene, so sad the day!
Too harsh, O Winter, is thy sway!

Distances of the Stars.*

BY CAMILLE FLAMMARION.

Since the beginning of this century our idea of the universe has undergone a complete metamorphosis, though but few persons appear to recognize this fact. Less than a century ago the savants who admitted the earth's motion (some still rejected it) pictured to themselves the system of the universe as being bounded by the frontier of Saturn's orbit, at a distance from the central sun equal to 109,000 times the diameter of the earth, or about 800,000,000 miles. The stars were fixed, spherically distributed, at a distance but a little greater than that of Saturn. Beyond this limit a vacant space was supposed to surround the universe. The discovery of Uranus, in 1785, did away at once with this belt, consisting of Saturn's orbit, and the frontier of solar domination was pushed out to a distance of 1,900,000,000 miles from the center of the system—that is to say, beyond the space which was vaguely supposed to be occupied by the stars. The discovery of Neptune, in 1846, again removed these limits to a distance that would have appalled our fathers, the orbit described by this planet being 2,862,000,000 miles from the sun.

But the attractive force of the sun extends further still. Beyond the orbit of Uranus, beyond the dark route slowly traversed by Neptune, the frigid wastes of space are traveled over by the comets in their erratic courses. Of these, some, being controlled by the sun, do not leap from system to system, but move in closed curves, though at distances far greater than those of Uranus and Neptune. Thus Halley's comet recedes to a distance of over 3,200,000,000 miles from the sun; the comet of 1811, 36,000,000,000; and that of 1680, 75,000,000,000. The period of the last-named comet is 8,800 years.

Still these figures can scarcely be compared to those which represent the distances of the stars. What means have we of measuring these distances? Here the diameter of the earth will not serve as the base of the triangle, as when we measure the moon's distance; nor can we, as in the case of the sun, get any assistance from another planet. However, fortunately for us, the arrangement of our system affords us a means of measuring these distant perspectives; and this, while demonstrating over again the earth's motion round the sun, turns that motion to account for the solution of the greatest of astronomical problems.

In revolving round the sun, at the distance of 92,000,000 miles, the earth annually describes an ellipse of about 500,000,000 miles. The diameter of this orbit is 184,000,000 miles. As the earth's revolution round the sun is performed in a year, the earth, at any given instant, will be opposite to the point where it stood six months before, as also to the point where it will stand six months later. Here is a line of sufficient length to serve as the base of a triangle, the apex of which shall be a star.

The process, then, for measuring the distance of a star from the earth consists in minutely observing this star at an interval of six months, or, better, for a whole year, noting whether it remains fixed, or whether it undergoes some little appreciable displacement of perspective, owing to the annual displacement of the earth around the sun. If it remains fixed, this is because it is at an infinite distance from us—at the horizon of the heavens, so to speak—and our base-line of 184,000,000 miles is as nothing in comparison with this remoteness. But if it is displaced, then we know that it annually describes a small ellipse, corresponding to the annual revolution of the earth. Every one has remarked, while traveling by rail, how the trees and other objects near at hand move in a direction contrary to our own, their speed being greater in proportion to their nearness; whereas distant objects on the horizon remain fixed. This same effect is produced in space, in consequence of our annual motion round the sun. But though we move incomparably swifter than an express train, our rate being 1,632,000 miles per day, and 68,000 per hour, the stars are so distant that they scarcely budge. Our 184,000,000 miles of displacement are almost nothing as concerns even the nearest of them.

* Translated from the French of "La Nature," by J. Fitzgerald, A. M.

The inhabitants of Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus or Neptune, with their orbits five, nine, nineteen and thirty times as large as ours, could determine the distance of a far greater number of stars than we.

This mode of measuring the distance of the stars by the perspective effect produced by the earth's annual displacement was anticipated by the astronomers of the eighteenth century, and in particular by Bradley, who, while attempting to measure the distances of the stars by comparing together observations made at an interval of six months, discovered—something else. Instead of finding the distance of the stars on which his observations were directed, he discovered a very important optical phenomenon, viz.: the aberration of light, the effect produced by the motion of light and the motion of the earth combined. Similarly, William Herschel, while seeking the parallaxes of the stars by comparing bright stars with their nearest neighbors, discovered the systems of double stars. So too Fraunhofer, while seeking the limits of the colors in the solar spectrum, discovered the absorption rays, the study of which has given rise to spectrum analysis. The history of the science shows that frequently discoveries have been made in the course of investigations which had but little to do with them directly. Columbus discovered the New World while aiming to reach the eastern coast of Asia by sailing to the west. He would never have discovered it, would never have sought for it, had he known the true distance between Portugal and Kamtschatka.

It was not until 1840 that the distance of any of the stars was ascertained. This discovery is therefore of recent date, and we are only now beginning to form an approximate idea of the real distances which separate us from the stars. The parallax of the star 61 in the Swan, which was the first to be determined, was ascertained by Bessel, and was the result of observations made at Konigsberg from 1837 to 1840. In 1812 Arago and Mathieu had made observations on this star, but without reaching any certain results. The parallax of Alpha in the Lyre was found by Struve, in the course of observations made at Dorpat between 1835 and 1838; but it was not published till after the year 1840. The same is to be said of Alpha in Centaur, observed in 1832 and 1839, on the Cape of Good Hope, by Henderson and Maclear; this is the nearest to us of all the stars.

There are two ways of determining these parallaxes. The first is to compare together the positions observed at intervals of six months; the other to discover an apparent motion in a star (as compared with a motionless star situated at a far greater distance than that which is studied,) this apparent motion being due to the perspective produced by the annual revolution of the earth in its orbit. This is the method mostly employed now. Galileo, in his "Dialogues;" Gregory, in the "Proceedings of the Royal Society" (1675;) Huyghens, in his "Cosmotheoros," published in 1695; Condorcet, in his "Eloge of Roemer," in 1773; and William Herschel, in 1781, have described both methods. Hooke, Flamstead, Cassini, Bradley, Robert Long, Herschel, Piazzi and Brinkley strove, from 1674 to 1820, to determine the small quantity of the apparent movement of the brightest stars, which used to be regarded as the nearest; but their efforts were fruitless, owing to the inconsiderable amount of this motion. There was need of instruments of the utmost precision, a rigid spirit of observation, and an indomitable patience in order to get at trustworthy results.

Since 1840 the attention of astronomers has been oftentimes directed to this investigation, and thousands of calculations have been made. With great difficulty astronomers have succeeded in determining the parallaxes of a few stars. But the inevitable errors of observation often involve the results in obscurity. Let the reader only bear in mind that there is not one star that is sufficiently near to give us a parallax of one second! A second is the dimension to which would be reduced a circle one meter (3 feet 3.37 inches) in diameter carried away to a distance of 206 kilometers (127.72 miles) from the eye. This appears to be less than nothing—it is equal to the thickness of a hair stretched at the distance from the eye of 20 meters (74 feet.) The apparent annual movement of a star, whose distance can be known, is performed altogether within this infinitesimal space. For an observer on the star that is nearest to us, this hair would conceal the whole space between the earth and the sun.

As no star offers a parallax of one second, it follows that the nearest of the stars is distant from the earth no less than 206,265 times 92,000,000 miles. The space which surrounds the planetary system is void of stars to that distance at least.

The star which is nearest to us, Alpha of Centaur, has a parallax of 0,″91. Its distance from earth is 226,400 times the radius of the earth's orbit, or 21,000,000,000,000 miles. This is our neighbor star, and its distance is probably the minimum distance between star and star—21,000,000,000,000 miles. Each of these stars shines with its own light—is a sun like our own.

The second star, in the order of distances, is 61 Cygni. Its parallax is 0,″51, and its remoteness 37,000,000,000,000 miles.

Of the thousands of stars which have been studied, we know the distances of only twenty. Among these we may signalize Sirius, a sun 2,688 times larger than our own, surrounded by a system of heavenly bodies, several of which are already known, and distant from us 82,000,000,000,000 miles; the Polar Star, which is a double star, distant 292,000,000,000,000 miles; and Capella, distant 425,000,000,000,000—a space which is traversed by light in seventy-one years and eight months; so that the luminous ray which reaches us from this fine star in 1874 must have started out in 1803! Capella might have been extinguished in 1804, but we should see it still. It might go out to-day, and yet the inhabitants of the earth would continue to admire it in their heavens until 1946. Conversely, if there existed, on the planets gravitating round Capella, minds whose transcendent vision could thence descry our little earth, lost as it is amid the sun's rays, they would now see the earth of the year 1803, and would be seventy-one years eight months behindhand in its history. These are the stars that are nearest to us. The others are incomparably more remote. There are stars whose light cannot reach us in less than 100, 1,000 or 10,000 years, though light travels at the rate of 185,000 miles per second! To traverse the sidereal world of which we form part (the Milky Way,) light takes 15,000 years. To reach us from certain of the nebulæ it must travel for 300 times that period, or 5,000,000 years. Let the imagination, that is not applied by these immensities, strive to conceive of them. If it does not experience the "vertigo of the infinite," let it calmly contemplate these abysses, and realize the position of the earth, and of man in presence of them. Thus will it gain some conception of the discoveries made by sidereal astronomy. Such are the dimensions actually measured in the general constitution of the universe. As yet we are only at the vestibule of the edifice, on the edge of the abyss of infinitude; and we shall never penetrate very far beyond.—Popular Science Monthly.

Enthusiasm in Preaching.

A preacher may be a master in theology, yet a dullard at God's great work of preaching. He may know church history from Abraham to Bishop Cummins. He may have the root of every pivotal Greek and Hebrew scripture word at his finger tips; yet unless he understands the art of discourse so as to bring his linguistic, historic and theological lore to bear with the power of eloquent and effective speech on men's hearts, it will do about as little execution as the Pope's bull against the comet. The preacher's stores of knowledge will be as the cannon and shot and powder without the flash of fire.

Sacred and high above every other art, therefore, is the art of preaching, or the preparation and delivery of sermons. Dealing with the deep things of God and of the human soul, with infinite aims and elements of everlastingness, it should be studied profoundly, with a lofty and sustained enthusiasm; and its pursuit and practice should call out the best there is in every young man's soul who gives himself to the ministry. The need of our time is just here. The art of putting things by pen and tongue gets no such time and study as it deserves. There is no serious lack of theological learning in our modern pulpits. There is reasonable familiarity with the historic past of Christianity. The Hebrew and the Greek are sufficiently at the command of the preachers of our day to insure a fair interpretation of the original Scriptures. But great sermonizers—men who not only have something to say, but who know how to say it—men with an artistic passion for putting truth in the most effectual, logical and rhetorical forms—men with downright and glowing enthusiasm in the construction and delivery of sacred discourse—surely we all know that they do not go in crowds. Thoroughly enthusiastic homiletes, stirred with a great passion for the single art of preaching, going to the weekly work of making and delivering sermons as if with a fire in the bones, are seldom seen. You can find men enough to give you sound doctrine, men enough to give you the exact and delicate shades of meaning of the original text; but they are lamentably few who seem aroused and all aglow as they write and preach. Not what to preach, but how to preach, is the commanding question—how to unfold and press home the truths of God so as to arouse men's consciences and storm men's hearts. What the pulpit needs is enthusiasm—a holy, burning enthusiasm in the study and practice of the divine art of preaching. The mischievous and shameful talk we have had in the religious press about "dead weights" and "useless lumber" and "ne'er-do-wells" in the ministry would have been without even its meager justification if the students in our seminaries had given themselves with their whole hearts to homiletic discipline and the homiletic art. Now, to be stirred with a true passion for this art, it is requisite that there be a realization of its intrinsic dignity. The vocation will be tamely pursued that does not impress the one pursuing it with its nobleness and worth. The poet thinks no other art like his; so too the painter and the sculptor. They come to their canvas or marble all aglow with an enthusiasm that burns within them. They are in love with their art. They pursue it with a kind of passion. They think it divine. And the canvas and the marble catch their spirit and glow, and breathe and speak under their touch. So, but with a loftier enthusiasm and more absorbing earnestness, should the preacher pursue his art. He cannot fail of thus pursuing it, and he cannot fail, therefore, of power and success if, having been called of God to it, he grasp those great and mighty ideas which stand indissolubly connected with the work of preaching, and which uplift and glorify it as the art of arts.—Herrick Johnson, D. D.

QUIN, the actor, being asked by a lady why there were more women in the world than men, replied: "It is in conformity with the other arrangements of nature—we always see more of heaven than of earth."

DR. JOHN HALL, remarking that in England they distinguished people into two classes, Churchmen and Dissenters, thinks that in America they might be divided into Churchmen and Absenters.

MANY favors which God giveth us ravel out for want of hemming; for though prayer purchases blessings, giving praise doth keep the quiet possession of them.—Fuller.

The Perils of the Young.

The Interior thinks, and rightly, that ministers should not hesitate, in times like these, to show with great plainness of speech the fearful penalties of licentiousness:

It is not an agreeable subject to handle. One hesitates to give occasion for the impression that those who assemble in the churches upon the Sabbath are in need of such preaching, because, indeed, but few do need it, and yet the truth ought in some way to be deeply impressed on the minds of the young. There is great need for knowledge on this subject. A worthy professor in a Western college, some years ago, took a class of young men into the venereal ward of a city hospital, and pointed out to them wrecks of humanity being eaten alive by maggots. It was a most shocking lesson, and one which brought a shudder whenever, in after years, it occurred to the memory. He then delivered a lecture on the subject. Those young men were thoroughly guarded against her "whose guests are in the depths of hell."

There is no vice against which God has erected such severe penalties; none which society punishes with such implacable scorn; none which so destroys self-respect and so breaks down moral character; none which is a more certain precursor of eternal death. And there is none which strikes with such ruinous effect at the very foundations of society. It destroys the family relation. It blasts the home and all that is sweet and holy and blessed in that sanctuary. It fills the veins of innocent children with its accursed taint, and if they survive it is to bear a life of pain and of loathsome disease. There is no vice, no crime, which so utterly lays waste all the fields of human happiness, and sows them so thick with the thorns of disease, disgrace and bodily and mental suffering, as this.

The destruction of moral character is such that the man who yields to it becomes ready for any other act, however mean, groveling or dishonest. The woman who yields to it becomes a foul, blasphemous virago, and after a brief career, not to exceed an average of five years, dies in anguish and infamy; or if, through God's grace, she pauses and retraces her steps, it is through a vale of tears and sorrow wide as her life is long. That path "takes hold on hell," and one step in it gives hell a hold on him or her who takes it which only the power of almighty God can break. Whether we like the duty or not, it is a duty which the parent, the pastor, the religious press, and all who have the ear of the young, owe at this time, to point out the truth in regard to this insinuating, seductive, destructive and damning vice.

A STARRY NIGHT is a most potent auxiliary to revelation in vivifying our thought of the somewhere where God dwells. These glistening worlds are places, of which we say "here" and "there." The universe is resplendent with them. Christian astronomers conjecture, from the disclosures of the telescope, that there is a certain unique globe, the center of all gravities in celestial space, which holds to the whole sidereal cosmos the same relation that Alcyone—the most radiant of the Pleiades—does to our solar system. They guess that around that center of all motion, stars and systems of stars, and firmaments of systems, are revolving in intricate and tributary splendor; and they suggest that there is the imperial capital of the universe. There is the one world which has no motion but on its own axis, itself the emblem of eternal and infinite repose. And there, as nowhere else, it may be, is concentrated the superlative glory of Jehovah's presence. We must concede not only that this finds no contradiction in the disclosures of the Bible, but that the reserve of inspiration is here and there broken by hints which encourage such conjectures. "Is there not something at the bottom of our hearts, better than science, which invites us to believe that what would be so fitting and beautiful is also triumphantly actual?"—Prof. Phelps.

PRAYER.—1. Let your prayers be composed of thanksgiving, praise, confession and petition, without any argument or exhortation addressed to those who are supposed to be praying with you.

2. Adopt no fixed forms of expression except such as you obtain from Scripture.

3. Express your desires in the briefest, simplest form, without circumlocution.

4. Avoid the use of compound terms in place of the imperative mood.

5. Hallow God's name by avoiding its unnecessary repetition.

6. Adopt the simple devotional phrases of Scripture; but avoid the free use of its figures, and all the quaint and doubtful application of its terms to foreign subjects.

7. Pray to God, and not to man.

COMFORT FOR JOG-TROT PEOPLE.—Moralizing on the state of the times, the Tribune says: "For our own part, we are willing to acknowledge in these feverish days a great yearning toward commonplace people, who write no poetry, and are content with life's jog-trot duties. Depend upon it, to this kind is the world indebted for whatever happiness it may rescue from wrecked hopes and disappointed ambitions. Wordsworth was right. A woman may be too bright and good for human nature's daily food. Her irritating restlessness may grow to a bother. Her elegant sentimentalities may lead to nerves. She may expect an impossible happiness from marriage, and grow morbid with disappointment. And what we say of her we may say with equal propriety of him. Happy both if God vouchsafes to them the inestimable blessing of obscurity and the mild lot of the majority!"

THE right waiting for the coming of Christ allows us to remain neither idle nor unfruitful, but inspires us with an earnest zeal constantly to appropriate and improve every spiritual gift.—Kling.

Religious Intelligence.

THE Baptist church at Ongole, India, has 8,000 members, and is now the largest Baptist church in the world.

THE Turkish government allows Mohammedans to turn Christians; but they are not free from military service.

MR. MARTIN, of the United Presbyterian mission, has recently baptized twenty-seven converts in the Semikole district, India.

THE son of the first member taken into the Bethel ship, New York, in 1845, was ordained for mission work among the Swedes in San Francisco at the late California Conference.

REV. O. GIBSON, of the Chinese mission, San Francisco, baptized three women a few Sabbaths ago. The work among the Chinese was never in a more prosperous condition than now.

AN OLD Catholic priest of Switzerland says sixty-seven Roman Catholic priests have been convicted of immorality in France and Switzerland during the last two years. The old priest has taken to himself a wife.

A NEW departure in the history of Episcopalianism was marked, on Sunday, October 11, in Chicago, by an exchange of pulpits between Bishop Cheney and Rev. Abbott E. Kittredge, of the Presbyterian Church.

THE thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Missionary Society of the Evangelical Association was held recently at Cleveland, Ohio. From the report of the treasurer the total receipts for the year were $70,584.20, and expenditures $62,897.65.

IT IS stated that an Old Catholic congregation for London is now in course of formation. The standard of belief necessary for membership is that insisted on by the first seven Ecumenical Councils, or the faith of undivided Christendom.

ON SUNDAY, October 25, the first English church erected within the walls of the city of Rome was opened for public worship. The building stands in the Piazza St. Sylvestro, and is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The first sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Nursey to a congregation which numbered about 180.

TWO THOUSAND and sixty-seven English rectors, vicars, curates and deans have signed an address to their archbishops and bishops, praying that no authoritative sanction may be given to the use of the eastward position or of a distinctive eucharistic dress by the clergy when officiating at the administration of the Lord's Supper.

MRS. SARAH A. COLLINS was recently licensed to preach by the Algonn District Conference, northwestern Iowa. The vote was almost unanimous after a brisk discussion. The question was submitted to the Conference, after a ruling by Presiding Elder Bennett Mitchell, that, inasmuch as there is no law against such license, the latter would be perfectly legal if voted.

THE Indian Evangelical Review, after carefully collecting statistics, thinks that the actual number of converts to Christianity made from the heathen in India during the year 1873 is about 6,000, or, including Burmah and Ceylon, considerably over that number. The average increase during the eleven years ending with 1861 was 983 annually, and during the next ten years 2,784 annually. These figures show that there is a regular increase in the fruits of missionary efforts in India.

WHAT would Christian work in India or anywhere be but for woman? So it is no matter of surprise that a dispensary for women has been established at Benares, the holy city of the Hindoos, by one of the princes of India. Miss Brink, M. D., has charge. According to the Friend of India an extensive field has been opened in India for women physicians. So much have Miss Brink's services been appreciated that several more women doctors could find employment in Benares.

THE Canadian Methodists have a mission in Japan. Their two married missionaries reached that country in the summer of 1873. One of them has taken a school in the interior, at Shidzuoka, one hundred miles from Yokohama, under the express agreement of teaching Christianity in connection with his educational and medical labors. The other is learning the language at Yokohama, where he has baptized two converts—his teacher and his servant. Like the first converts of the other Japanese missions, these young men have an intense desire to spread the gospel.

THE American Board issues three weekly papers at Constantinople. One of these is in the Armenian language, one in Turkish, printed in Armenian character, and one in Turkish, printed in Greek character. Each of the three weeklies contains about the same amount of matter as one full page of the Congregationalist. The subscription price for each is $1, and the total paying circulation of the three about 1,300. Besides the weeklies, the board publishes four illustrated monthlies for children, in Armenian, Armeno-Turkish, Greco-Turkish and Bulgarian, with about 4,000 subscribers, half of whom are Bulgarian.

THE last news of the year has just been received from the missionaries in Labrador, dated October 20. Rev. Mr. Butler had just returned from his brief visit to the States. Miss Brodie had been full of care in the homes of the people, several children having died from a contagious disease which had reached the coast. They were lamenting also the death of a man, who was one of the earliest friends of the mission and an active member of the church. Only a little band is left to assemble at the Esquimaux River chapel in the eight long months of wild winter which will intervene before the next trading vessel visits the coast.

REV. DR. DUDLEY, conservative, of Baltimore, has been elected assistant Bishop of Kentucky, in place of Bishop Cummins—promoted! Ritualism makes its appearance as a disturbing element in a new quarter. At the Conference of Reformed German and Reformed Dutch Churches in Philadelphia the project of union between those sects, which has hitherto been very favorably entertained, is more imperiled by the rumor of ritualistic practices than by differences of doctrine. The German brethren are said to be high church; the Dutch low—of course without reference to geographical origin. There is, however, a readiness to make concessions on both sides, which much encourages the hope that union will be effected.—Tribune.

AT THE recent annual meeting of the Ocean Grove Camp Meeting Association of the Methodist Episcopal Church it was reported that the proceeds from sale of lots the past summer have amounted to very nearly $30,000. The receipts from other sources about $10,000 more. Total liabilities of the association, $6,000. The treasurer has in hand, and due the association, $10,000. There are 396 lots surveyed, yet unsold, together with a large tract of ground not yet surveyed. This is valued at $150,000. The association has accumulated property in tents, buildings, etc., to the amount of nearly $60,000. It is estimated that during the past season 40,000 persons have visited the grove.

MOHAMMEDAN INTOLERANCE IN TURKEY.—The London Times correspondent writes: "There appears to be a revival of religious intolerance in Turkey. Not only is the observance of the Mohammedan ritual to be enforced, but, as a letter from Pera states, long-forgotten ordinances prohibiting the residence of Christians in the Turkish quarter have been revived. The subordinates have carried out their instructions with great brutality, bundling the people and their furniture into the streets. Several Germans employed on the Roumelian railway, who were obliged to live near the line, have been thus treated. The decree of 1840 and the treaty of 1856 promised that nobody should be molested on account of his religious opinions."

THE patriarch of Antioch during his late visit to London was taken to see the library of the British and Foreign Bible Society, which is rich beyond any other in copies of editions of the Bible in all languages. He contemplated the scene with silent wonder. Many books in many tongues were shown to him and excited his astonishment; but the climax of surprise was reached upon the production of Walton's Polyglot Bible. Here he saw the two versions in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Arabic and his native Syriac side by side. He shook hands warmly with the secretaries on leaving, and praised God for all he had seen and heard. The sights and sounds of Christian England are likely to shed some light on the patriarchal mind.

A NEW religious movement has arisen in India. Its leader is called Dhulee Babajee, literally "Father of Dust," because he always sleeps on the bare ground. Babajee eats but one meal a day, drinks only milk and water, and never uses narcotics. His dress consists of a strip of bark. He denounces idolatry, caste, the Brahmins and the use of spirituous liquors. He teaches the worship of the Creator and Preserver of the world, the practice of prayer to God, truth, charity and chastity. He has thousands of disciples, who have come from nearly every caste. Whole villages have given up their idols and have adopted his precepts. His followers have a number of hymns in praise of the indescribable God, which contain some ideas that must have been derived from Christian books. The expenses for bedding, robes and other incidentals, which are serious burdens to the followers of other varieties of religious belief, will press but lightly on the adherents of Dhulee Babajee.

THE ice is breaking in more directions than one. At a meeting of the Baltimore Young Men's Christian Association, a few weeks ago, quite a sensation was created by the rising of a former Roman Catholic priest, Rev. F. Y. Jacquemet, with this announcement of his withdrawal from the Romish to the Presbyterian Church: "I return into the church in which I was born and raised, fully convinced that it is the church of the true gospel, which is simplicity and purity. My mother was a strict Presbyterian, and I was reared in a regard for the true principles of Calvinism. Since I was ordained a priest, in 1860, I have been in many missions in this country, and in Europe, Asia and Africa. If I separate myself from the Catholic Church, it is not that I have anything against any one. I esteem the Catholic head of this diocese. He has always been kind to me. My heart knows no hatred, no hard feeling against any one. I have, in a communication to the archbishop, indicated my formal separation from the Roman Catholic Church, and now reunite myself with the primitive, the mother church, in which I was born."

THE membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States is 1,563,521; of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, 667,885; of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, 67,888; of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, 200,000; of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, 164,000; of the Evangelical Association, 90,249; of the United Brethren in Christ, 120,445; being a total of 2,873,988. Of the non-episcopal bodies the figures are as follows: Methodist Church, 65,000; Methodist Protestant, 65,000; American Wesleyan, 20,000; Free Methodist Church, 6,000; Primitive Methodists, 2,000. Total of non-episcopal Methodists, 158,000, and of episcopal and non-episcopal combined, 3,031,988. Of Methodists in the United States there are 3,031,988; Wesleyans in Great Britain, 376,439; Irish Wesleyans, 20,740; French Wesleyans, 2,012; Australian Wesleyans, 66,686; Primitive Methodists, 164,660; New Connection Church, 33,563; United Methodist Free Church, 66,909; Bible Christian churches, 26,878; British Wesleyan Reform Union, 8,109; Church of Canada, 102,887; Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada, 22,641; being a grand total of Methodists throughout the world of 3,923,512.

CHANGE OF RATES.

In conformity with an agreement between the several papers published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the subscription price of the ADVOCATE, including postage, will hereafter be as follows, viz.:

One year	$2 50
Six months	1 50
Three months	80

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE of the ADVOCATE has been ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR to ministers of the gospel, and the same to the widows of deceased itinerant preachers. Where bills have been sent charging them more than that amount it was owing to the fact that they were not known as such to the book-keepers, and if they will inform us the accounts will be corrected. Should they have already paid we will credit the amount overpaid on subscription, or dispose of it as they may order.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

RATES.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate will be furnished to subscribers hereafter at the following rates, including postage:

One Year	$2 50
Six Months	1 50
Three Months	80

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

to all Ministers of the Gospel, traveling or local, and widows of deceased traveling preachers.

FREE ONE YEAR

The New Rule.

We suppose the new rule to be lost. Few of the Conferences have given even a majority vote in its favor, while the most have thus far gone overwhelmingly against it. No question that has come before the church has ever had a more prolonged and thorough discussion. The decision has been rendered not hastily, but after examination, and with all the light that the ablest thinkers and writers could shed upon the subject. Ministers and laymen have voted understandingly and conscientiously, and we shall cheerfully accept the result. We could have wished that our church, through its highest tribunal, should in some way record its testimony against the liquor traffic in terms express and unmistakable. Our preference was to leave the General Rule as it is, and to put any additional action in a separate chapter, or to place it as a deliverance in the form of a resolution in the General Conference journal. At the same time we were not unwilling to yield to those who favored a new rule, believing that, while it was not the best way, it would do no harm, and might be the means of good.

We have not, however, attached that importance to the subject that it seems to have had in the minds of many. While not quite indifferent, we have felt that the church would be safe and prosperous whether the rule should be adopted or rejected. Sound discipline can be administered by the book as it is, and the Bishops have decided that members may be excluded for the crime of selling intoxicating liquors. The discussion for the present quadrennium is about over. The church journals have given both parties an impartial use of their columns, and the subject has had a very thorough sifting in all its bearings. So complete has been the discussion in the papers that the Conferences have generally acted without debate, and the members have promptly delivered their votes according to convictions formed by a deliberate and careful study of the question.

The grounds of objection to the new rule have been various, but we are sure that those who have opposed its adoption are not enemies to temperance. They do not favor the traffic, nor the use as a beverage, nor do we think that the refusal to concur in the action of the General Conference can be reasonably so construed. Damage has been feared in this direction, but we hope and believe that the mischief apprehended will not be realized. We have an explicit rule against "drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors unless in cases of necessity;" and the logical inference is that the traffic is condemned and prohibited. On the general principle of "doing no harm" the episcopal bench decides that the liquor dealer can be tried and excluded. With the old rule, and this decision before us, the law of the church is not equivocal. Without any disciplinary rule touching the subject, with an enlightened conscience and the word of God to guide us, offenders against good morals and the welfare of society can be reached. But on this subject we have a statute and a decision which apply explicitly, and which together cover the whole ground. If in this view of the question it is thought by the great majority of the members of the Annual Conferences that further legislation is needless, and that it might be even detrimental, it would be a gratuitous and unreasonable conclusion that they are not most earnestly opposed to intemperance and to everything which leads to it.

That some who have become entangled in the iniquitous trade may pervert the action of the church, and endeavor to find shelter and vindication under a misconstruction of it, is probable; but a clear exposition of the law and its interpretation, and a firm administration of discipline, will soon expose the error. The opponents of the new rule have generally discriminated between the merits of the temperance question as demanding total abstinence and withdrawal from the trade, and the expediency of further ecclesiastical legislation. While they favored the former in principle and in practice, they distrusted the latter. We do not go over the arguments, but we believe that nine-tenths of those who have voted against the change discriminated in this way. They abstain on the same ground that Paul would have done when he declares: "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." They regard the manufacture and sale for general use as a beverage to be wicked and indefensible, but to their minds there were complications and embarrassments in the way of special legislation on the vices of the day. We may not share with them in this apprehension, especially in reference to the liquor trade, whose vast proportions and wide-spreading influences give it a colossal eminence; but the fact vindicates them from the charge of unfriendliness or of inconsistency in their attitude toward the cause of temperance. The position assumed by some that they ought to adopt the new rule, lest its rejection should be misapprehended, is, we think, unsound. The reason for the reference to the Conferences is to check and reverse unwise legislation, and those who were conscientiously opposed to the action of the General Conference were bound in duty to vote in accordance with this conviction. They did not place themselves in this dilemma, and they have done what they regarded as best for the church, and for the interests of good morals and religion.

We are not without hope that the discussion will result in good to the cause of temperance, and to the more effective administration of the Discipline as it is. The voluminous ventilation has shed light, imparted information, and reached thousands who have hitherto read little on the subject. Liquor-drinking and liquor-trading have been thoroughly exposed, and the public conscience has been quickened and public sentiment elevated. Those who judge further legislation unnecessary will be careful to administer the law as it is, and thus demonstrate the truth of their position. Reflecting upon the agitation of the subject with all the calmness and impartiality which we can command, and taking the loss of the new rule as a settled fact, we are persuaded that good and not evil will follow. With charity and temper unimpaired, both sides may now move forward cheerfully in their common work, and with an eye equally single to the glory of God.

Conference Sessions.

The three Conferences to whom the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE belongs, and within whose bounds is its chief circulation, meet within the next thirty days—the Alabama, which met yesterday, the ninth, at Opelika; the Mississippi, which assembles at Hazlehurst on the sixteenth; and the Louisiana, which is to convene at Alexandria, January 6. Our personal intercourse with the members of these Conferences, as the representative of the ADVOCATE during the last five years, has been most agreeable. We almost feel that we belong equally to all of them, and we are sure that we feel a lively interest in the welfare of all. May their sessions be pleasant and profitable, and attended with the presence of the Master, and by the power of the Holy Spirit. We hope all may get good appointments, and that the preachers and their families may have occasion to recognize the hand of Providence in the disposal of their lot for another year. If everything is done "as in the immediate presence of God," the business and the appointments will be as well done as possible. If all are imbued with the spirit of Christ the deliberations will be temperate and forbearing, and the conclusions reached will be just and wise. The interests represented and affected by an Annual Conference are of great magnitude. Besides these immediately spiritual, embracing a close examination of the character of the preachers, and the condition of the work, education, church literature and finance are prominent. The welfare of the church and the well-being of the country are vitally connected with Conference action on these subjects. They should have thorough and patient consideration. Sunday schools and missions are also deservedly prominent. For the latter there is to be an organization under the new plan, and measures devised for a forward movement on the foreign field. We presume no other deliberative bodies in the world dispatch so much important business in a week as our Annual Conferences. With committee and cabinet work and daily sessions, they are driven to their utmost, early and late. To the working men of the body it is a period of unparalleled labor and care. There is danger of undue haste. The brethren become restless, are perhaps anxious to know their destiny for another year, and important interests are either neglected or imperfectly considered. It is better to make haste slowly, and take time for the disposal of business.

Sacred Music.

Music is the language of sentiment, as speech is the language of thought. If we do not think in words, we find in them the best expression of our thoughts; if we do not feel in notes and measures, our feelings find ever their fullest conveyance in musical strains. Since music is the language of the affections, that music must be best in which the noblest emotions of the soul find appropriate manifestation. Education, reflection and experience concur to convince us that our relations to God transcend all others in importance, and that, however comely or beautiful other sentiments may be, those only can claim to be truly great, worthy and noble which touch upon eternal things. To love God is the highest function of the human soul; to teach others to love him is the noblest work of human life. That music possesses in a wonderful degree the power of inspiring in other hearts the feelings of the soul in which it originates, none will deny. In this characteristic lies its great potency for good to the world. The mission of music seems essentially divine. To think of it as merely "the concord of sweet sounds," or as simply the pleasing result of mathematically measured and harmoniously adjusted notes, is to degrade it into a mechanic art or a magician's charm. Its proper conception is higher, its mission holier far. It is rather, in its divinest form, the gospel of God wooing with kind words and soothing with soft symphonies the woe-smitten heart of man, attuning his perverted and discordant affections to the melody of heaven, and waking, amid the desolations of the fallen soul, responses to the chailenges of the celestial host.

The highest music is essentially a divine inspiration. As with the orator, so with the musician, all appearance of studied art is fatal to the production of the greatest effect. No act or sentiment ever produced its highest possible effect which did not appear to be the spontaneous suggestion of the moment. Hence the enthusiasm with which congregations usually sing when the hymn is announced in couplets from the pulpit. They seem to themselves as well as others to be singing the spontaneous sentiments of their own hearts. All attention to books, especially to notes, while singing, is like water upon the wings of the spirit in its heavenward flight. The church needs the benefit of inspiring song at this time. Thousands of our Israel are dumb when God is to be praised, and those who in many places have monopolized the service of song do not even profess to realize the sentiments they hymn for others' edification. Choristers and choirs and all the sons of song need, even as the ministers of the word, the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Undevout performance and vain display are the bane of the singing in many churches. We need sanctified music from consecrated musicians. Mr. Moody, the great revivalist, would be as a man laboring with one hand if he did not have Mr. Sankey to sing for him. May the Lord indue the leaders of music in our churches with a double portion of his Spirit, that the glorious function which the structure of our natures and the design of our Creator make possible for the service of song may be realized in all the assemblies of his saints. H.

Letter from Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, MEXICO, Nov. 3, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: Yesterday (Monday) and the day before were two of the many fiesta days celebrated in all Catholic countries. These, as of all others, the Catholics make the most of. To a stranger in Mexico there is, in appearance, a putting forth of all possible strength. Though compared to other times, when it was as much as a man's life was worth to declare himself a Protestant—when Catholicism was the power of the land—it is like the waning light of day compared to the sun in mid-heavens. Though gradually giving away before the dawn of better things, Romanism has much strength yet. That strength is closely husbanded. She makes the most of every little thing to gain money or keep out the light of a purer faith. I am assured that the church holds a large, if not controlling influence, in many of the lotteries, and their name is legion. On Sunday—"La fiesta de todos los Santos," "All-Saints' day"—really commenced the "feast of All-Souls"—"La fiesta de todos los Muertos." As it was an opportunity for individuals as well as churchly speculation, time was taken by the forelock. Booths of all shapes and sizes were erected on the east and west side of the Grand Plaza. These were filled with candied skulls and skeletons, together with candied sheep, dogs, cats, hogs, birds, etc. Various colored candles were on hand in large quantities—candles for little children and big children. The fact is, looking into these booths, into the big shops and little shops, throughout the town, one could have been easily persuaded that it was "the feast of candles"—"La fiesta de los Velas," en lugar de "La fiesta de los Muertos." Whether devotion is measured by the length and size of the candle, I know not, but it would seem so, as many of these candles are from six to eight feet high, and large in proportion. Of course only the rich can afford such lights, and of course in proportion only the rich are religious. This is not in harmony with the teachings of the Savior.

Besides the wonderful display of candled skulls, skeletons and animals, there are piles and piles of wooden skeletons, so arranged with small wire springs as to present the most horrible spectacle. Sometimes the mouth, or rather the jaw-bone, opens and shuts, bringing the skeleton jaws or teeth suddenly together. Then, again, the image is made to hold, in bony fingers, a parchment, and the head moves forward and backward in a kind of hilarious reading. And yet again, added to these are tombs, hearses and funeral processions, all in black paint. The processions are miniature men and women following the corpse on foot, so fixed on two flat, thin pieces as to represent a single or double row of mourners, at the will of the holder. Mixed in all the way with these things are immense piles of fruits, nuts, cakes, miscellaneous toys, and manufactures of clay, painted and figured very prettily. If all these things were at all calculated to arouse serious reflections and preparation for death, they would not be so objectionable. But it is a feast, and an earthly one at that. But few if any of the great mass, passing to and fro, in and out, even remembered that it was the holy Sabbath, much less the solemn and emphatic command "to keep it holy." There was manifest eagerness to buy cheap and sell dear. Small theaters, "jacolenes," temporary buildings, had been erected to the east, and right under the shadow of the grand cathedral; and while prayers were being said and confessions made in the one, harlequins, puppets and small plays were running rampant in the other. Happy children and smiling servant girls were passing with hands full of candied skulls, miniature skeletons, hearses and funeral processions, without a thought of the solemn lesson they ought to teach. Furthermore, I am informed by an intelligent Englishman, who has lived here many years, that Catholic parents help to carry out the delusion with their children. On the eve of "La fiesta de los Muertos"—this year on Sunday night—they purchase a miniature tomb, place it on a table, and surround it with candles, skulls, skeletons, fruits and rich food, according to the number of the household dead. The children and young people of the family see this before going to sleep. On awakening in the morning the candles have burned out, the fruit and food all gone, and they are made to believe that the dead consumed it during the night. So the children grow up to practice the same delusion on their children. From an early hour the graves of the loved dead are visited. In company with a friend I visited the cemetery of San Fernando. It is the resting-place of the great and the rich. I believe interments are no longer permitted, as a sanitary measure. There are here some splendid marble monuments, costing immense sums, as marble is almost as valuable as silver. The cemetery was crowded, people standing, kneeling, sitting and walking. Quite a display of wealth and taste is shown in the decoration of the graves.

No doubt to many much religious comfort is experienced. Bouquets of wonderful beauty and richness, chaplets of subdued colored beads, and a great profusion of burning candles, of all sizes, convey to the living memories of the dead. Quite a crowd was assembled around the resting-place of Benito Juarez, the defender of freedom, and the noble-hearted lover of his people. For the moment I was puzzled to find his mortal remains resting near the center of the most aristocratic Catholic cemetery perhaps in the republic. Many of the "Night Thoughts" of Dr. Young had birth in the fact that the tender and beautiful Narcissa, his step-daughter, was denied a grave in the city of Lyons. No greater rebel against Rome's authority perhaps ever breathed Mexican air than Juarez. And yet here we find his dust! A second thought reminded me that through his freedom of thought and conscience the chains were broken, and the heretic (?) could select his own resting-place. His tomb is a very plain, substantial one, neatly fenced in with iron railings. Splendid floral offerings, tributes of freedom-loving friends, were seen here in great profusion. In this cemetery also are the graves of Mejia and Miramon, who perhaps, with Father Fischer, now at the head of a Catholic college in this city, were the controlling spirits that led Maximilian back to Mexico and to death from Puebla. But for the promises and pleadings of these sanguine men it is believed that Maximilian would have abdicated and never returned to Mexico. The brave Mejia and Miramon suffered death with the equally brave and generous Emperor.

By order of the city government the cemeteries were closed at eleven A. M. on account of prevailing sickness—typhus fever, almost an epidemic. The crowd passed in through an immense iron gateway, but had to pass out through the gloomy church, San Fernando. Numbers were kneeling, praying, many audibly, to the different saints. A priest stood between the two principal entrances, doing apparently a good business. The parties would pass partly behind his little railing, give some information about the dead for whom they desired his prayers, which were offered quickly, the money received, and change returned. Passing out, others would crowd forward; and so the work went on. I noticed three richly-dressed ladies, kneeling together, praying to a saint whose image was suspended just over the marble font of holy water. Seemingly without interrupting their devotions, the rich and the poor were coming and going to the font, passing directly between them and the object of their worship. I write not these things in malice. I have always honored the sincere Catholic for his firmness and faithfulness to his teachings. I am far from indorsing the spirit or teachings of Rome. I think there must be something radically wrong in the religious training of a man who can kneel by your side at the same altar, engaged in prayer, and at the same time steal whatever he can lay hands on; or who will rob you by force, and then, without repentance or reformation, obtain forgiveness at the hands of the church for a moneyed consideration. But at the same time Catholicism, in faithfulness to her teachings, in zeal for her customs, in her earnest aggressiveness, sets us an example worthy of imitation. We see not with her eyes, we hear not with her ears, we work not with her hands. Let us be careful of our words—put a bridle on our thoughts, lest we be guilty of the thing we condemn in others.

A line in the beginning of this letter hinted at a contrast between the Romanism of to-day and the Romanism of other times. The contrast holds good not only in Mexico, but in the entire Catholic world. Every point is open to the distribution of God's word and Protestant effort. Is it not a curious fact that while Catholicism is evidently waning in all purely Catholic countries, it makes the most astonishing headway in the freest country in the world—your own United States? Her own almost infinite resources, being strengthened, at that, by Protestants themselves, adds to this rather startling than curious fact. In her own peculiar domain—in countries where she has held sway for hundreds of years without a rival or fear of molestation, her gates closed against Protestantism in any form, even the Bible shut out—there, in her own countries, her own people have risen up in solemn and dignified protest, closed her convents, extinguished her Inquisition fires, and placed her on a level with other churches, and Rome seeks and finds a refuge in the bosom of Protestantism. Papers in Mexico throw in the face of their authorities the liberty of your own country. Here processions are forbidden; there they are not. I do not complain. I would not have you less free. Unless Rome has changed—and sooner may you look for the leopard to change his spots—she is the same in the United States that she has been, that she is in Mexico, in Spain, under the shadows of the Vatican itself; and I ask the significant question: How can mothers, Methodist mothers, give their daughters to become future Catholic mothers, under the pretense of education, when all and more advantages are offered in their own church? I am only astonished at what must astonish even Catholics. They are true to their church and professions. A father, mother or child would be excommunicated and consigned to perdition to be guilty of such unfaithfulness. Protestants, under the idea of liberty, thus minister to an open and avowed enemy. I again repeat, these things are not written in anger. I write only as a Protestant—I hope only as a humble Christian.

TRANSFERRED.—Rev. N. M. Skipworth, late presiding elder of Shreveport district, and J. E. Bradley, of Mansfield and Pleasant Hill circuit, Louisiana Conference, save the St. Louis Christian Advocate of November 25, passed through this city last week, arriving on Friday morning and leaving on the evening of the same day for Oregon, to which, or rather to the Columbia Conference in Oregon, they had been transferred. Their families are with them, all well, and thus far they had had as safe and as pleasant a journey as could have been expected. They go to a far distant field, but to one whitening to the harvest. May the Lord of the harvest be with, bless and keep them.

BY A PRIVATE NOTE from Rev. J. M. Pugh we learn that he has resigned the presidency of Marvin College, Waxahachie, Texas, and that he has been appointed to Calvert and Hearne station. Bro. Pugh's address is now Calvert, Texas.

Merry Saints.

It was a maxim of Bishop Elphinstone, an eminent Scottish saint, that when any one sits in company, and any merry thought comes into his head, he ought to give utterance to it immediately, so that all present may be benefited. Sydney Smith, when a poor, struggling curate at Foston-le-Clay, a dreary, out-of-the-way place, wrote: "I am resolved to like it, and to reconcile myself to it, which is more manly than to fancy myself above it, and to send up complaints by the post of being thrown away, or being desolate, and such like trash." Acting in this spirit, he said his prayers, made his jokes, cheered and helped his neighbors, and upon fine mornings used to draw up the blinds of his little parlor, open the window, and "glorify the room," as he called the act, with sunshine. Yet this was nothing to the sunshine that flooded his heart and lighted up his face; and so buoyant was he in spirit when his physical strength was nearly exhausted that, just before he died, he playfully described his condition by saying: "I feel so weak, both in body and mind, that I verily believe if a knife were put into my hand I should not have strength or energy enough to stick it into a dissenter."

A more striking example was Robert Hall, who could indulge in merry jests and pungent sayings even when suffering from sharp pain. "Mr. Hall," said some one to him, "I understand you are going to marry Miss ——?" "I marry Miss ——! I would as soon marry Beelzebub's eldest daughter, and go home and live with the old folks." To a solemn brother who rebuked him for his vivacity, he replied: "You carry your nonsense into the pulpit; I keep mine out." Even when stricken with mental hallucination he did not lose his relish for a jest. When a stereotyped condoler called upon him at the asylum, and asked, in a whining tone, "What brought you here, Mr. Hall?" he significantly touched his head and replied: "What'll never bring you, sir!—too much brain, sir! too much brain!" Thomas Paine, writing against the Bible, he characterized as "a mouse nibbling at the wing of an archangel." Dr. Gill's Commentary was a "continent of mud;" the writings of Owen "a valley of dry bones." When we think of the dreadful agonies that racked Mr. Hall's powerful frame we cannot wonder that he thought of heaven chiefly as a place of rest, nor that his experience was sometimes clouded by storms and darkness, just as many of his majestic sermons are tinged by the shades and terrors that grew upon his great soul; but it is a marvel to which we can find nothing more wondrous in the whole library of brave anecdote that, after tossing and writhing upon the rug before the fire, the only place in which he could get ease, he could start up livid with exhaustion, and with the sweat of anguish on his brow, to proclaim without a murmur from his pulpit the message of God to a lost world. "I suffered much," the noble hero used to say after these paroxysms, "but I did not cry out, did I? Did I cry out?"—Prof. Matthews' "The Great Conversers and Other Essays."

THE PRESIDENT'S Thanksgiving proclamation has been criticised adversely by some of our Northern religious exchanges as deistical rather than Christian. Not even an Anno Domini appears in it! But even a Jew or a Mohammedan should tell the truth. We might excuse the heathenish character of this State document if it were marked by ordinary pagan veracity. Witness this well-flavored and broad declaration: "The blessings of free government continue to be vouchsafed to us." What say the good people of Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina to this self-evident truth? The Philadelphia Presbyterian excepts to the proclamation on other grounds:

In this heathenish proclamation—for it is neither Jewish nor Christian—the year of our Lord is not mentioned. Even the Anno Domini is carefully lifted out—to please whom? we ask. Not the Israelites, for they are not either fools or hypocrites; they would not expect the warp to be drawn from all history, and it is a slight consideration to them to leave Anno Domini out of a small proclamation while it remains in all legal papers, so that the machinery of government and justice could not run a week without it. We are compelled to say that it looks more like a proclamation to materialists and atheists, and would as well have been addressed to Pan as to the religious views of either Jews or Christians. And if the Christians of the nation were to be guided only by what is there expressed, they would not worship at all.

DIED, in Jackson, Mississippi, at eight minutes past six o'clock on Sunday evening, November 29, of typhoid pneumonia, James M. Martin, aged sixty-six years, one month and seven days. Thus has passed away one of the oldest printers in the South, and he was for sixty years a true and devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

THE INTELLECT.—The intellect of man sits visibly enthroned upon his forehead and in his eye, and the heart of man is written upon his countenance. But the soul reveals itself in the voice only, as God revealed himself to the prophets of old in the still small voice, and in the voice from the burning bush.—Longfellow.

FRIENDSHIPS are never completed till men are bound to each other by the common experiences of sorrow.

A Very Peculiar Sect.

In London exists a sect—a small one, we trust—that has several times been in court upon a charge of a very singular character. Their peculiarity consists in the belief that no medical aid should be called in when one of their number is sick, but prayer and good nursing should be relied on, and only. A few weeks ago Thomas Hines was brought before Baron Pigott on a charge of manslaughter. The prisoner was accused of having caused the death of his child by neglecting to provide it with necessary and proper food and with medical attendance; but there was clearly no ground for the charge as far as food was concerned, and the question of medical attendance was the only one left for consideration. The "Peculiar People" have rendered themselves notorious on several occasions by their passive resistance to the prevailing custom of sending for doctors to visit and attend their sick. They interpret literally the injunction of the Apostle James to call in the elders of the church to pray and to anoint with oil, and they not only interpret this injunction literally, but they regard it as containing their whole duty in the matter, and as excluding any resort to the aid of medicine. It was proved that the child whose death was made the object of indictment was taken ill at the end of May, and that he died on the sixth of July following. No doctor was called to him, nor was any medicine given; but he was watched and tended carefully, was anointed and prayed over, and was fed not only with ordinary food, but also with port wine, brandy, arrowroot, milk and tea. The reason why no medical advice was sought was that recourse to it is contrary to the faith of the sect, who in such cases "trust in the Lord." The medical evidence was to the effect that the disease was of a nature to have been amenable to treatment, and that if a doctor had been called in the chances of the child's recovery would have been increased. It was then contended, on the part of the prosecution, that medical attendance was a "necessary" which the parent of this child of tender age was bound to provide, and that there had been such criminal neglect on his part as would render him liable to legal penalties.

Baron Pigott, upon the evidence, decided that there was no case to go before the jury, and directed an acquittal. The learned baron said that the prisoner, "instead of being guilty of culpable negligence, appeared to have done everything for the good of his child according to his lights. He might be a person with narrow or perverted views, and altogether mistaken in his interpretation of the passage of Scripture that had been quoted during the trial," but there was nothing to show any neglect of duty on his part. The London Times says: "The common sense of the public will heartily concur with this view of the case, and will perceive the impolicy of instituting a criminal trial upon the grounds assigned. If the profession of religious scruple against medical aid were made to cover neglect of other kinds, then there need be no hesitation about punishing such conduct as an offense; but the medical art has not yet reached a state in which the mere absence of a doctor can be held to establish a charge of manslaughter."

It would indeed be a grievous burden if the citizens were required, under penalty of prison or death, to call on somebody else in case his child were sick. The law would next require him to call some qualified physician, and then the law must decide between the schools of practice, and then how sick the patient must be before the doctor is summoned, and thus the complications would be impossible and absurd.—New York Observer.

"THE HONEYMOON is all well enough," said a prudent belle, "but what I want to see beyond that is the promise of a fine harvest moon."

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting be borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

GREGG'S PURCHASING BUREAU.—Our readers will notice that Gregg's establishment is progressive. Having removed into the large building, 154 Canal street, next door to the New Orleans Savings Institution, they are now prepared to entertain and accommodate their numerous friends and patrons. All novelties new and useful can be had. Sewing machines of every kind furnished to parties living in the country on monthly payments. Our readers can rely on their judgment, promptness and veracity. Give them your order, and you will do so again.

INHALATION.—There will be found in this issue of the ADVOCATE a communication from Dr. K. B. Hunter, who has spent his winters in this city for a number of years, and has had a large practice. Accompanying the letter are testimonials from a number of citizens of this city who may be easily found by those who may ask for information in regard to his system of treating the blood and lungs by inhalation.

CARPET WAREHOUSE.—One of the oldest and best carpet houses in the Southern country is that of A. Brousseau & Co., 17 Chartres street, New Orleans. Everything usually found in a carpet warehouse, consisting of imported and domestic goods, can be found in their establishment, and of the best material. For a more complete enumeration of the articles kept by them we refer to their advertisement in another column.

THE Upper City Blue Boot and Shoe store displays, this winter, a superb stock of boots, shoes, hats and trunks. Mr. J. Phillips, the superintendent of the manufacturing department, guarantees satisfaction to all; while Mr. Louis Gimbel, agent, gives strict attention to filling country orders. For further information see advertisement in another column.

MINERAL WATERS AT HOME.—Messrs. Frederickson & Harte offer to invalids all the celebrated mineral waters, at their drug store, 139 Canal street, on draught, in bottles or in barrels. Invalids may avail themselves of the advantage of these waters without foregoing the pleasures of home. See advertisement elsewhere.

THE favorite Home Lunch Saloon is clean, neat, fresh and attractive. If you wish to take your lunches at a saloon where there is good cooking, prompt attention and cleanliness, with the best of everything in their line, and at the lowest prices, go to the favorite saloon, No. 71 Camp street.

BUTCHER.—The attention of ship and steamboat masters and stewards, as well as families, is directed to the advertisement of Mr. J. Duharry, stalls 2 and 4, St. Mary's Market. See his card in these columns.

COAL.—Mr. J. Chandler offers to deliver coal at fifty-five cents per barrel to families. His coal yard is at the corner of Tchoupitoulas and Philip streets. See his advertisement.

PAINTER, GILDER AND VARNISHER.—William Hillsman is a sober and industrious citizen, a good and faithful mechanic, and reasonable in his charges. We have known him for many years, and unhesitatingly recommend him to those who want faithful work at low prices. House, steamboat or sign painting, glazing and marbling will be done well and promptly. His residence is 536 Royal street; his shop, 120 Calliope, corner of Magazine. See his advertisement.

GENEVA HAND FLUTER.—In another column will be found the advertisement of our excellent neighbor, Edward Thompson, Esq., No. 90 Baronne street, of a new patent fluting machine, which is certainly the simplest, cheapest, most durable and, we think, the best we have seen. The cut in the advertisement will fully explain and suggest the advantages of the patent.

FAMILY GROCERIES.—Those who are in need of family groceries are referred to the advertisement of Mr. C. W. Roth, corner of Carondelet and Poydras streets. The very low prices at which he offers the different kinds of tea is worthy of special notice. Give him a call.

ON THE

Treatment of the Lungs & Blood

BY INHALATION.

In my second letter I explained the true meaning of the term "inhalation," as applied to the method of treating the lungs by medicated vapors. Its scientific employment depends on the knowledge and experience of the physician. Diseases of the lungs are not all alike, nor is the same disease alike in its different stages. Besides this, we must take into consideration the peculiarities and constitutional idiosyncracies of each individual. To properly administer inhalation the physician must adapt the medicines used to the exact requirements of each case, and to do this a wide and general use of the materia medica is necessary.

Many medical men strongly contend for the constitutional character of Consumption, and so ignore altogether its local treatment. The past failure of physicians has mainly arisen from the false treatment based on this dogma. Of what use is it to dose the stomach with cod liver oil and tonics while the patient is dying for want of breath? It is the lungs that are obstructed, not the stomach, and it is the lungs that must be acted upon if we would cure the patient. The bad state of the lungs is the real danger, and this is the part to be defended by the physician.

Far be it from me to deny the value of medicines by the stomach when they are required. But in Consumption, Bronchitis and Asthma the patient is grasping for breath, and will die if he does not get relief. We cannot give him more air by putting cod liver oil and tonics into his stomach; therefore these medicines are not required, and cannot possibly do any good. Our effort should rather be to cleanse the air tubes from obstructing mucus, to allay irritation in the mucus lining of the lungs, to open the air cells and improve the breathing. These objects can all be attained by applying our remedies directly to the seat of the inflammation and obstruction in the lungs, and by no other means.

If it be admitted that it is desirable to subdue inflammation in the air passages and lungs, to expel secretions of mucus and pus, to arrest the spasm of asthma and eliminate ulcers to heal, then the patient must inhale, for it is only by the local action of inhaled vapors that these effects have ever been accomplished.

But this is not all that can be accomplished by inhalation. The absorbing surface of the lungs is about 1,500 square feet—that is to say, at each breath this enormous extent of surface is exposed to the action of the air. Now, as the chief office of the lungs is to purify the blood, it will be understood that this great surface of blood is acted upon by whatever is inhaled in a moment of time, and repeated upon new blood at every breath. Thus it is that every drop of blood in the body and the entire system is brought in a wonderfully short period of time under the influence of whatever the atmosphere contains for good or ill. Can you believe that the vegetable poisons of miasmata and the deadly virus of infectious fevers, which fill our veins with consuming fire, enter our blood through this ever-open channel, and yet that medicines and antidotes will be rejected?—It is unnecessary to answer this question, for there can be but one answer. Medicines in a state of vapor are not only taken up into the blood when inhaled, but produce more powerful constitutional effects than by any other form of administration. It is not necessary to swallow medicines to act upon the blood, for by inhaling them we produce much more speedy effects.

The truth is, the stomach is a very uncertain organ for the administration of medicines. The physician can never tell to a certainty what will become of the dose he sends there. It may die in the stomach inactive for hours, or meet unfriendly elements in the food and juices of that organ, which will entirely neutralize its action. In gaseous state, medicines are not liable to change, and when breathed act upon the blood, neutralizing its impurities instantaneously.

Here I approach a point about which there is much deception. I refer to the treatment itself. Of late years most physicians admit the superiority of inhalation treatment in lung cases, and many profess to employ it who show, by their mode of doing so, that they are still lamentably ignorant of its requirements. Not a day passes but patients come to consult me who believe they have already tried inhalation, when in reality they have merely been blowing spray down their throats by the Atomizer. This is not what is meant by inhalation treatment. spray does not enter the air cells of the lungs, and has no power to act upon the blood. These Atomizers, whether operated by steam or hand, merely produce a spray or fine mist. You can draw this into the throat, and a little of it may go into the windpipe, but that is no treatment for Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption, or any other form of lung disease, and experience proves that it does no good. It is at best only a sham kind of inhalation, which misleads the mind of the patient, and cheats him out of the reality by making him think he is under inhalation treatment, when he is merely blowing salt and water, or other inert solutions, down his throat.

What I mean by inhalation is gaseous medicines which are carried by the air directly into the cells of the lungs, and there act not only on the diseased parts, but on the blood itself, just as certainly as the oxygen does. By this we get both a local and a constitutional action. This will cure where all other human means fail.

DR. HUNTER'S PRACTICE.

A CARD.

Believing the following facts to be of interest to many of your readers, I ask a place for them in the columns of your paper:

Some years ago I became a sufferer from Bronchitis and Chronic inflammation of the Stomach, both of which affections became more and more harassing as time went by. With the cough I was much troubled, and experienced some shortness of breath on exertion. The stomach was always out, and painful on the least pressure, and consequently gave me much uneasiness.

Three years ago I was induced to call on Dr. Hunter, of No. 165 Canal street. I placed my case in his hands, with the intention of trying his mode of treatment as a last resource. I am glad to say that the results proved satisfactory in every way, for at the end of one month I found myself in a fit state to continue further treatment, such was the rapidity with which I experienced complete relief under his care.

My disease having continued so long, at the time I consulted Dr. Hunter I had almost despaired of my recovery from it, as the remedies I had applied from time to time, prescribed by different physicians, had given little or no relief. But of inhalation I can speak confidently. (I do not know what it was that was given for the stomach, but I found that also of permanent benefit.) My health in every respect is much improved, but the Bronchitis I believe to be entirely removed. I no longer experience any unpleasant sensations arising from it; and from my own experience the fact to be deduced is that inhalations are the most reliable for obtaining the result so ardently desired by all persons laboring under affections of the Lungs or Throat; and I unhesitatingly advise all my friends who require the services of a physician for such diseases to try the treatment to which I owe so much. Some of my friends who tried Dr. Hunter's treatment have also been cured.

The following notice, commending the practice of Drs. B. & K. B. Hunter, is taken from the editorial columns of the Herald and Presbyter:

DR. HUNTER.

We have been publishing, from time to time, letters on Catarrh and diseases of the Lungs, by Dr. Hunter, and we have published a number of testimonials of cures by his method of treatment. We also have seen letters from various persons, including some of our ministers, testifying to the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's treatment. Below is an editorial article from the pen of the Rev. Jesse H. Berry, an assistant editor of the American Christian Review:

"I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman and physician whose name introduces this article. I regard him as one of the few whose professed mission is 'to cure the ills which human flesh is heir to,' whose skill and remedies are all that is claimed for them.

"For about one year I had been suffering from an affection of the throat, which at first was annoying, and afterward developed symptoms which I considered dangerous. The voice grew rough and husky, the palate and mucous lining of the throat became inflamed and at times painful, and I feared at one time that I would be compelled to cease speaking in public. Remedies were tried, some of which gave partial and temporary relief, while others did not seem to influence the disease in the least. When Dr. Hunter began the publication of his interesting letters in the Review I commenced to read them. There seemed to be so much common sense in his statements that I was induced to apply to him. I obtained his 'Inhalator' and remedies, and by following a few simple directions an entire and, I think, permanent cure was effected in the short space of three months. My throat is well, and I am in the enjoyment of the most vigorous, robust health. Several of my personal friends who were similarly affected I recommended to try Dr. Hunter's remedies. They did so, and so far as I have learned of the result they have either been cured or are rapidly improving. In a letter before me, a professor in one of our colleges, and who was afflicted with throat disease for years, as of who has been using the 'Inhalator' says: 'All traces of the disease have left me, and I am a well man.'

"In these days of quackery and deception, to know that there are physicians in whose ability and integrity we can have confidence is no small matter. This statement respecting Dr. Hunter is voluntary on our part. We commend him to the afflicted readers of the Review.

JESSE H. BERRY."

DR. TUTT'S VEGETABLE LIVER PILLS.

THE STARTLING DRAWBACK ON nearly all medicinal agents has ever been that in their process of purgation and purification they have also debilitated the system. To obviate this difficulty physicians have long sought for an agent that would

PURGE, PURIFY AND STRENGTHEN

AT ONE AND THE SAME TIME.

Their research has at last been rewarded by a discovery which fully realizes the fondest desires of the medical faculty, and which is justly regarded as the most important triumph that Pharmacy has ever achieved. This important desideratum is which purifies the blood, and removes all corrupt humors and unhealthy accumulations from the body, and yet produces no weakness or lassitude whatever, but, on the contrary, tones the stomach and invigorates the body during the progress of its operation. It unites the heretofore irreconcilable qualities of a Strengthening Purgative and a Purifying Tonic.

Dr. Tutt's Pills are the most active and searching medicine in existence. They at once attack the very root of diseases, and their action is so prompt that in an hour or two after they are taken the patient is aware of their good effects. They may be taken at any time without restraint of diet or occupation. They produce neither nausea, griping nor debility, and as a family medicine they have no rival.

SERMON FOR THE BOYS.

BY ALICE CARY.

The boy who does a stroke and stops
Will ne'er a great man be—
'Tis the aggregate of single drops
That makes the sea, the sea.

The mountain was not at its birth
A mountain, so to speak—
The little atoms of sand and earth
Have made its peak, a peak.

Not all at once the morning streams
The gold above the gray—
'Tis a thousand little yellow gleams
That makes the day, the day.

Not from the snow-drift May awakes
In purples, reds and greens—
Spring's whole bright rejnoe it takes
To make her queen nf queens.

The Breaker of Chains.

Once there was a deceitful man who wished to make slaves of some ignorant savages. So he went to them, taking some round circles of bright steel, and he said to them: "Put these bracelets on your arms." The poor creatures thought they were pretty ornaments, and gladly put them on. Now these bracelets were not really bracelets, but handcuffs made to fasten prisoners with. So when the deceiver had got them in his power he said: "Now put these pretty chains on your ankles, and these on your legs, and this big chain around your neck."

Then most of tbo ignorant men obeyed him gladly, and went on putting on the chains; hut some said: "No; we have had enough; these chains on our wrists cramp us; take them off again." But he laughed at them, and answered: "You should have thought of that before; now you are in my power, and must do as I bid; put on these chains, or I will make you." So all the wretched slaves (for they were slaves now) did as they were bid, and made themselves more and more completely slaves. And the worst of all was that when he had them in his power he set them to work making more chains for other people.

Many and many a time the poor men struggled to get free, but all in vain; and many a time people came with large hammers and huge stones, and tried to break the chains; but it was all to no purpose. The hammers and stones made a great noise, but they broke nothing, and the deceiver only laughed at them.

At last there came one bringing a bag full of files, and he offered one to each prisoner. Some of the prisoners were so used to their chains that they liked them, and did not take the files, because they did uot want to be free. Another of the prisoners said: "This file is of no use; can this little thing do what that great hammer could not do? Look at this thick chain around my body; though I worked for a year I could not break it." So some of them would not take the files; others threw them down after a few moments' trial; others worked patiently away. Those that had only the thin bracelet round their arms soon filed it through (and sometimes the heaviest chain would snap asunder with a touch of the file;) others, who had many thick chains, had to work on patiently for years before they were quite free; but in the end all that worked gained their freedom.

The deceiver is sin, and the chains are sinful habits. A bad habit sometimes at first does not seem very wrong. For instance, many a little child will steal a piece of sugar, or tell a falsehood for fun, who would not steal money or tell a serious lie.

When we have once been caught with these little sins, we are loaded with heavier ones. Punishments and warnings do not break us from our sins.

Then Christ comes with the file that is love or gratitude; and if we patiently work away in love for Christ we shall be freed in time. Sometimes Christ frees us while we are quite little children; sometimes not till we are older; sometimes he frees us suddenly; sometimes uot for a long time. The louger we have gone on serving as slaves to sin, the harder it is to gain our freedom.—Parables for Children.

Will O' the Wisp.

Once when England was not so well cultivated and drained as it now is, travelers by night used sometimes to see in woods and wet marshy places a light called Will o' the Wisp. It looked very much like the light of a candle shining from a cottage window.

Once a poor tired traveler, seeing the Will o' the Wisp, said to himself: "There is the light of a candle yonder; there must be some cottage close by where I can get a night's lodging." Then he turned out of the right road and went toward the light; but when he came close to it he fonnd himself knee-deep in water, and the light had vanished from its place, and seemed to have moved away. He ran after it, but the more he ran he only plunged deeper and deeper into the water, and wandered farther and farther from the right way.

Now he began to be in great trouble, for he did not know where ho was, and he was so tired that he felt as though he could scarcely stir a step farther. But he thought of his wife and little children waiting for him at home, and he determined to make one more trial to find his way. He said a short prayer and set out once more. Suddenly another light appeared. He went cautiously up to it. This time the light did not move. It came from a cottage, where they were glad to see him, and treated him very kindly, so that early the next morning he was able to set out on his journey again, and reached home safely.

Jesus is the light of the world. But he has given some of the light to each of us, just as the sun gives some of his light to the moon. Jesus told us that we are to let our light shine, so that other persons may see it. He meant that we are to set others a good example.

If you say your prayers, and profess to be a Christian, and yet all the time are unkind and selfish and dishonest, what do you think your little brothers and sisters, who are younger than you, may possibly say? They will say: "Those that love Jesus are no better than others. It is no use to pray to Jesus, for he does not help people. If our brother is selfish, we may he selfish too." Thus you will lead your little brothers and sisters away from Jesus. You will be like the Will o' the Wisp.

How much better to be like the steady light of the cottage candle, that you may lead others right, instead of wrong! Here are two lines written by a poet named Shakespeare. Some time or other you will read his books for yourself; but these two lines you can understand and remember now:

Parables for Children.

The Peach and the Sparrow.

A little boy called Jem Roberts was sent to weed in a gentleman's garden. While there he saw some very fine peaches on a tree which grew upon a wall, and was strongly tempted to pluck one.

"If it tastes but half as nice as it looks," thought he, "how sweet it must be!" He stood for an instant gazing on the tree, while his mother's words, "Touch nothing that does not belong to you," came quickly to mind. He withdrew his eyes from the tempting object, and with great diligence went on with his work. The fruit was forgotten, and with pleasure he now saw he had nearly reached the end of the bed which he had been ordered to clear. Collecting in his hands the heap of weeds he had laid beside him, he returned to place them in the wheelbarrow which stood near the peach-tree. Again the glowing fruit met his eye, more beautiful and more tempting than ever, for he was hot and thirsty. He stood still, his heart beat, his mother's command was heard no more, his resolution was gone. He looked arouud; there was no one but himself in the garden. "They can never miss one out of so many," said he to himself. He made a step—only one; he was now within reach of the prize; he darted forth his hand to seize it, when, at the very moment, a sparrow from a neighboring tree called aloud: "Chep, chep;" but which seemed to his startling ear to be: "Jem, Jem." He sprang back to the walk, his hand fell to his side, his whole body shook, and no sooner had he recovered himself than he went from the spot.

In a short time afterward he began thus to say to himself: "If a sparrow could frighten me thus, I may be sure that what I was going to do was very wicked."

And now he worked with greater diligence than before, nor once again trusted himself to look on the fruit. The sparrows chirped again as he was leaving the garden, but he no longer fled at the sound.

"You may cry 'Jem, Jem,'" said he, looking steadily at the tree in which several birds were perched, "as often as you like—I don't care for you now; but this I will say: I will never forget how good a friend one of you has been to me, and I will rob none of your nests again."

Oh, may all the young watch and pray that they enter not into temptation, and ever remember the admonition: "Thou, God, seest me!"

A PLANT OF BRAZIL.—In the forest of Brazil grows a curious plant, about as high as a man, with a twisted stem covered with knots. This is the mandive; and from its roots come two things, bread and poison—the sweet, white flour which forms the bread of the people, and the deadly poison in which the Indian dips his arrow-points. The white flour is farina, and it goes all over the world as a delicacy for sick people and well people; but you never would guess that when the mandive roots were crushed to prepare it the juice that flowed out was deadly enough to arm the Indian's arrow against the great beasts of the forests.

That is not all. The natives know how to make from this same juice a liquor that will make them as tipsy as any of their white brothers can get on whisky. The women do the work, of course. Your savage is too much of a fine gentleman to serve himself; so the women gather the mandive roots, and slice and boil them quite soft. When the roots are cool they are ground quite fine; in a mill, do you suppose? Not at all; these useful women chew them, and spit them out in a vessel of water; when they chew them all up the whole contents of the vessel are boiled and stirred, and finally poured into jars, and buried in the floor of the hut, with the mouths tightly stopped. When the liquor is sufficiently fermented the drinking-feast begins, and the crazy Indians go from house to house, dancing and singing, until the jars are emptied. Then they go to sleep to get sober, and wait for the women to make some more liquor.—Little Corporal.

NOT YET.—"My son, give me thine heart."

"Not yet," said the little boy as he was busy with his top and ball; "when I grow older I will think about it."

The little boy grew to be a young man.

"Not yet," said the young man; "I am now about to enter into trade; when I see my business prosper, then I shall have more time than now."

Business did prosper.

"Not yet," said the man of business; "my children must now have my care; when they are settled in life I shall be better able to attend to religion."

He lived to be a gray-headed old man.

"Not yet," still he cried; "I shall soon retire from trade, and then I shall have nothing else to do but to read and pray."

And so he died. He put off to another time what should have been done when a child. He lived without God and died without hope.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Mr. Mechi on Poultry.

This eminent English agriculturist has the following tu say about poultry: "No one item on a farm pays so well as a good stock of poultry, properly managed. With them everything is turned to account. Not a kernel, wild seed or insect escapes their scrutinizing eyes. Their industrious claws are over at work, uncovering, ready for appropriation, every hidden but consumable substance. Fowls must have free access to chalk or lime for the shells of their eggs, and grit or gravel to grind the food in their gizzards. They luxuriate on grass or clover, which are a necessity for them. In winter they like mangolds or swedes. They must have access to plenty of pure water. The quality of the eggs depends upon the quality of the food. They, like ourselves, like shade in summer, and warm, sheltered corners in winter. They must have some access to shelter in wet weather. Fowls will not be long healthy on the same ground or yards—the earth gets taluted. Therefore, to prevent disease, lime and salt your yards and their usual pasture once a year, say in autumn, when the rains will wash it well in and sweeten the surface.

"Broods of chickens never do better with us than on the grassy brows or patches abutting upon the growing crops, either of corn or pulse, into which they run either for insects or for shelter. The roofs of the coop should be water-tight, and the coop should often be removed, having only the natural ground for the floor. The ground soon gets taluted unless you remove the coop. You can hardly make some people good managers of poultry if they lack observation and judgment. These are especially necessary in the breeding of poultry. Your male birds should be often changed, say at least once in two years, and they should be young and vigorous. Breeding in-and-in will not do, any more than it will with animals. I consider winged game, poultry and birds the farmer's friends. My poultry have access at all times to my fields. Fowls are very useful in cleaning off flies. I have often been amused at seeing the neat and quick manner of their taking flies from reposing bullocks and sheep, much to their comfort."

BALKY HORSES.—The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals puts forth a set of rules for the treatment of balky horses:

1. Pat the horse upon the neck; examine the harness carefully, first on one side, and then on the other, speaking encouragingly while doing so; then jump into the wagon, and give the word go; generally he will obey.

2. A teamster in Maine says he can start the worst balky horse by taking him out of the shafts and making him go round in a circle till he is giddy. If the first dance of this sort doesn't cure him, the second will.

3. To cure a balky horse, simply place your hand over the horse's nose and shut off his wind until he wants to go.

4. The brain of a horse seems to entertain but one idea at a time; therefore continued whipping only confirms his stubborn resolve. If you can by any means give him a new subject to think of, you will generally have no trouble in starting him. A simple remedy is to take a couple of turns of stout twine around the fore leg, just below the knee, tight enough for the horse to feel, and tie in a bow-knot. At the first check he will generally go dancing off, and after a short distance you can get out and remove the string, to prevent injury to the tendon in your further drive.

5. Take the tail of the horse between the hind legs, and tie it by a cord to the saddle-girth.

6. Tie a string around the horse's ear, close to the head.

TURKEYS AND INSECTS.—Near Sacramento, in California, they are cultivating the beet for sugar, and the army worm threatened it with complete destruction. Various plans had been tried to get rid of the pest. After awhile some one whose wits were about him bethought himself to experiment with turkeys. A flock of a little less than three thousand were let loose upon the invaders by relays, and after a severe struggle between voraciousness and the worms, the former came off triumphant. One of the birds was gorged so full that he died, and on opening him it was found that he had made way with about fifteen hundred of the pests as his individual share. Any one can reckon up for himself what would have been the number probably eaten by the whole flock, reckoning them at three thousand birds. Our own farmers might get a hint from this turkey cure for too much insects, and go to work accordingly.—Plowman.

CABBAGE SALAD.—Raw cabbage composes a part of our dinner every day, and I have various methods of preparing it, but think the following the best: Shave a hard, white cabbage into small strips; take the yolks of three well-beaten eggs, a cup and a half of good cider vinegar, two teaspoonfuls of white sugar, three tablespoonfuls of thick cream, one teaspoonful of mustard mixed in a little boiling water; salt and pepper to suit taste. Mix all but the eggs together, and let it boil; then stir in the eggs rapidly; turn the cabbage into the mixture, and stir well. I always make enough for two days at once, and it keeps perfectly, and is an excellent relish to all kinds of meat.—American Rural Home.

THE sun should never be allowed to shine on butter, or a package containing butter. More butter is injured from the farm-house to the village store, and in transportation by careless, unthinking or willful parties, than from all other causes combined.

Dr. Warrington's Analectic Oil.

THE GREAT PAIN DESTROYER.

Used internally and externally.

As a remedy for Rheumatism it has no equal.

The Analectic Oil is prepared from the most active vegetable remedies. It acts directly on the nervous system, and by restoring the nervous equilibrium it regulates the excretions and secretions of the body. It is also a powerful diffusive stimulant.

For Infants we challenge the world for its equal. It can be administered to infants one week old for Colic or Cramp. Dose, one-half drop to two drops, under three months old; and between three months and one year, two to five drops, in a teaspoonful of milk or water.

☞ REMEMBER. ☜

No preparation equals the Analectic Oil for Cholera, Diarrhea and Cholera Morbus. Try it and be convinced.

RENOVATING BITTERS!!

Purify the Blood.

STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all Bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

☞ Ask your druggist for either of the above medicines, and if he does not have it he will send and get it for you; or can be sent by Express to any part of the United States by addressing

Scientific.

PART 2, 1873, of the transactions of the Linnean Society of London contains a continuation of "The Botany of the Speke and Grant Expedition to the Interior of Africa." Many new plants are described; besides, numbers are enumerated with which botanists have been before familiar. It is interesting to note how many of the plants are allied to North American genera. For instance, we find an Epilobium, several of Jussiæa and Ludwigia. There are no less than twelve Vernonias, and several of Coreopsis and Bidens, and some others.

A NEW invention has just been tried in Paris, which is said to be a wonderful improvement on all previously known life-preservers. It consists in the employment of an India rubber tube rolled round the body with a sufficient number of folds to contain the necessary amount of air. This tube is placed concealed in a double envelope forming a shirt. It terminates by a mouth-piece, which shuts with the aid of a simple copper button. The operation is simple in the extreme, and the swimmer or immersed person has enough air for a whole day. When the apparatus comes to diminish in volume it is easy to expand it again by the principal tube without any effort or difficulty. When a steamboat blows up, the passenger who wears this contrivance has only to blow himself up, and go overboard, and all is well.

PROF. TYNDALL has recently been making some experiments upon the "acoustic transparency of the atmosphere," or its power of transmitting sound under different conditions, and has been led to some curious and important results. The most remarkable one (and it was entirely unexpected) is this: that a cloud of vapor, uncondensed and therefore entirely invisible, obstructs the transmission of sound incomparably more than a visible cloud of drops formed by the condensation of the vapor. Thus during a fog the air is vastly more transparent to sound than just before its formation or immediately after its clearing up. While the fog lasts the water is in the form of minute drops, which do little mischief. Before and after it is in the form of invisible vapor, and then powerfully obstructs the sonorous vibrations, sometimes, as in one case instanced, reflecting a portion of the sound so strongly as to produce a clear echo, seeming to come from mid-air without any perceptible cause. The clearness of the weather, therefore, is no indication of distance to which a sound can be heard. In fact, for various reasons, in cloudy weather sounds are, on the whole, likely to be heard the farthest.

A STRIKING difference between the more highly specialized male and female organs of plants is that while the stamens usually wither and soon disappear after discharging the pollen, the pistils in many cases continue, and, in connection with the ovarium, increase in size for some time after fertilization. A remarkable departure from this law in the case of the stamens has recently been noted in a sort of sedge grass of New Zealand, Gahnia xanthophylla. In this the authers, after discharging the pollen, continue to grow and bend downward to the length of about three inches, the ends twisting; so that the whole forms a hollow sack, like an old silk purse. When the seed is mature it leaves its position in the rachis and falls down into the sack, like money in a purse. In this position it remains suspended like a car from a balloon. Almost all these remarkable and exceptional phenomena in the vegetable kingdom have been found, after careful study, to be of some especial benefit to the plant; but no suggestion has been made as to the purpose of this peculiar arrangement. It is evident that this unusual development of the stamens in this way was for the express purpose of catching and suspending the seed; but what for is left for some future chapter in the history of the plant to tell.

THE ICELANDERS, says the Christian at Work, have had their millennial celebration, and now the next thing is emigration, and the United States is to receive the benefit of it in a way which will tend to develop the resources of Alaska as well as furnish a considerable increase of hardy toilers to our national population. A committee of three persons, chosen by the people of Iceland, is now in this country looking for a habitation for the entire people of that ancient island. A war vessel has been promised these avant couriers for the purpose of inspecting the coast of Alaska. They claim that by reason of climatic changes their native home is no longer suitable for a residence; that it has become too barren to offer the usual opportunities of deriving a comfortable living, and that starvation is prevented only by securing from other lands the bare necessaries of life. Alaska, they feel assured, is sufficiently cool. It is preferred to Canada, where a strong influence is now endeavoring to attract them. They promise to work the fisheries, supply the Pacific States with lumber, build ships, as in former times, at home, raise cattle and other commodities, and, lastly, furnish through their children a body of sailors for the Pacific coast trade. They are poor but determined, and wish, if the government will grant them the necessary assistance, to inaugurate the emigration at once.

On Saturday, under the unfavorable influence of a decline of ⅛c. in spots at New York, the market opened with a slack demand, and buyers claiming further concessions, which checked the movement. The sales during the morning were consequently confined to 1,300 bales, partly at previous rates and partly at a falling off of about ⅛c., after which the advantage was, if anything, still more in favor of buyers, resulting in a net falling off requiring a reduction in quotations of ⅛c. in low middling to strict middling inclusive, and a partial reduction of ⅛c. in other grades, the entire sales summing up 3,150 bales. On Monday the sales reached 7,550 bales. Low middling sold as low as 13⅛c., middling at 14⅛c., and strict middling to good middling at 14¼c. The market was unfavorably affected by a decline at New York (reported by the 1.40 P. M. dispatch) of ⅛c. in spots and 3-32@3-16c. in futures, as well as by the falling off at Liverpool and in foreign exchange. On Tuesday the market opened under the depressing influence of a decline of ⅛d. at Liverpool, and foreign exchange completely demoralized by the course of gold at New York, but with transactions at a falling off of 5-16@7-16 ₱ cent. Under these circumstances buyers claimed a reduction of ¼@⅜c., and, although factors generally were unwilling to give way more than ⅛c., yet 2,000 bales changed hands during the morning, partly at ⅛c. and partly at ¼@⅜c., falling off from Monday's reduced rates. The entire sales embraced 7,250 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 17,950 bales, against 17,350 for the corresponding time last week and 17,450 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 367,473 bales, against 319,367 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 308,909 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 187,181 bales to Great Britain, of 33,963 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 12,918 to France. We quote:

Strict ordinary	12¼ @ 12⅛
Good ordinary	13⅛ @ 13⅜

OF THE

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year to want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

WILKINSON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: This is my second year on this circuit; and though I cannot boast of "patience," yet I "have waited long for the precious fruit" of the gospel; and though "the early rain" seemed unpropitious, "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise," for in due time "the latter rain" has come down in more copious showers, and we are reaping a cheering harvest. Assisted by Bros. D. C. Langford and P. S. Pettey, of the Mississippi Conference, and T. W. Brown and A. White, local brethren, I have held five protracted meetings since the middle of August—two at Pisgah, two at Macedonia and one at Midway—extending through a period of forty-seven days, during which time we had about seventy-five sermons, with other usual exercises, and have as the matured results, up to date, quite a number of conversions, fifty-four accessions, twenty-three adult baptisms, nineteen candidates for membership, and the church generally built up. To God be all the praise.

P. HOWARD, P. C.

TALLASSEE, ALABAMA.—Mr. Editor: A short statistical statement from our church register will serve to show you the operations of the church at this place, and may meet the eye of some of our old friends, should you see proper to give it a place in your columns. Three years ago our Conference sent among us that sturdy old veteran of the cross, Morgan C. Turrentine. He has labored with us well and faithfully each successive year since, and, we trust, has won many stars for his crown by his untiring zeal and energy in the cause of our Master.

Our pastor, as you may know, is a man of nearly seventy-five years, fifty-three of which have been spent in spreading the word of life all over this Southern country, and yet he can safely challenge any preacher, young or old, to show a memorandum of a greater number of pastoral visits in the same length of time, and the following figures will show the results: When he came among us, in January, 1872, there were on the register 48 members; since we have received, by certificate, 56; by application, 63; from other communions, 5; total, 172. And our decrease has been: By certificate, 25; by expulsion, 5; by death, 3; lost sight of, 10; joined other communions, 11; new on the register, 118 members.

Respectfully,

J. M. SIMPSON,
Secretary Church Meeting.

The Quakeress and the Borrower.

An exchange says the subject of borrowing and lending came up in the course of a conversation with one of its subscribers the other day, when he suddenly recollected a funny occurrence of that character that happened in his neighborhood. He said that he had a neighbor whose family were great borrowers, but seldom, if ever, returning the exact amount borrowed. An old Quaker lady, another neighbor, who had endured these invasions for a long time patiently, hit upon a very philosophical mode of eventually putting a stop to the nuisance. Keeping her own counsel, the next time her good old man went to town he had a separate and express order to purchase one pound of the best tea, and also a new canister to put it in. As he knew she already had plenty of tea, and also a canister, he was puzzled to determine what the old lady wanted of more tea and a new canister; but his questionings and reasonings elicited nothing more than a repetition of the order.

"Jim, did I not tell thee to get me a pound of the best tea and a new canister? Now go along, and do as I bid thee."

And go along he did, and when he came home at night the tea and new canister were his companions. The old lady took them from him with an amused expression on her usually placid features, and, depositing the tea in the canister, set it on the shelf for special use. It had not long to wait, for the borrowing neighbor had frequent use for the aromatic herb. The good old lady loaned generously, emptying back in the canister any remittance of borrowed teas which the neighbor's conscience inclined her to make.

Time went on, and after something less than the one hundredth time of borrowing, the neighbor again appeared for "just another drawing of tea," when the oft-visited tea-canister was brought out, and found to be empty. And the good old lady and obliging neighbor was just one pound of tea poorer than when she bought the new canister, which now only remained to tell the story. Then she made a little characteristic speech, perhaps the first in her life. She said: "Thou seest that empty canister. I filled it for thee with a pound of my best tea, and I have lent it all to thee in driblets, and put into it all thou hast sent me in return, and none but thyself hath taken therefrom or added into it, and now thou seest it empty; therefore I will say to thee: Thou hast borrowed thyself out, and I can lend thee no more."

ARCHBISHOP WHATELY used to tell the story of a traveler who, finding himself and his dog in a wild country, and destitute of provision, cut off his dog's tail and boiled it for his own supper, giving the dog the bone!

Woman Suffrage.

Stand aside! Let the woman come! It might be a little inconvenient for some of them to get to the polls, but what of that? The wisest, best, most modest of them will keep away, but what of that? Our Northern brethren think nothing of it. They are determined that the women shall vote. The Northwestern Christian Advocate of October 21 says:

"Bishop Haven has been elected president of the American Female Suffrage Association that met in Detroit last week. That body is the Boston branch, and is a rival to the National Association of New York. The former studiously excludes all outside, infidel, free-love associations, and is a favorite as compared with the New York body. Bishop Haven has often declared to the ladies that they should seek success on the basis of a religion that honors God and Christ, and now his election betokens a disposition to hear his advice. He will accept, of course. If he does not, perhaps we personally will 'run' for the position. The cause is a good one, and will surely prevail, even in spite of scolds like Miss Anthony, Mrs. DeGeer, and so on, who seem to be raised up as obstacles to demonstrate how strong God is when he shall have given triumph to a good issue in the very face of such obstructive and unwise advocates."

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate remarks: "The Des Moines Conference, Bishop Haven presiding, had a lively time in regard to woman suffrage. Two reports were presented. The majority report proposed to pass the question as not proper for a religious body. The minority report was adopted, approving of woman suffrage, and requesting 'all good men and women' to speak out and co-operate for the promotion of the end sought."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

The Old Man of Dartmoor.

There was an old man of Dartmoor, who for many years obtained his livelihood by looking after the cattle distributed over those wild moorland hills. At last, through infirmity and old age, and the constant and unusual exposure to all kinds of weather, his sight entirely failed him, so that he had to seek an asylum in one of the west of England infirmaries to end his brief remaining days. While there he was frequently visited by one of his granddaughters, who would occasionally read to him portions of the word of God.

One day, when this little girl was reading to him the first chapter of the First Epistle of John, when she reached the seventh verse, "And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin," the old man raised himself and stopped the little girl, saying with great earnestness:

"Is that there, my dear?"

"Yes, grandpa."

"Then read it to me again; I never heard the like before."

The little girl read again:

"And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

"You are quite sure that is there?"

"Yes, quite sure."

"Then take my hand and lay my finger on the passage, for I should like to feel it."

So she took the old, blind man's hand, and placed his bony finger on the verse, when he said:

"Now read it to me again."

The little girl read, with her soft, sweet voice:

"And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

"You are quite sure that is there?"

"Yes, quite sure."

"Then if any one should ask how I died, tell them I died in the faith of these words:

"'And the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.'"

And with that the old man withdrew his hand, his head fell softly back on the pillow, and he silently passed into the presence of him whose "blood cleanseth us from all sin."

NOT the least of the calamities, says the Christian Union, attending carpet-bag misrule in South Carolina is the perversion of the school fund. Ample provision is made in the constitution and statutes for funds sufficient to instruct all the children of the State; taxes are levied and collected for that specific purpose; but a large part of the fund is systematically stolen by the executive and legislative departments, and the rest is so misapplied that little good is done. There are twenty-two school commissioners, with a salary of $1,000 each, few of whom give any attention to the office beyond drawing their salaries when the money happens to be in the State treasury and appointing unworthy favorites to positions, and several of whom cannot read and write. In many instances the natural result follows: the teachers are ignorant, unprincipled and brutal, and the sums paid for instruction are thrown away. Frauds of the most alarming character have grown up in the management of the schools; certificates of service have been given without schools having been taught, and duplicate certificates given almost as often. It is impossible to estimate the amount of the spurious claims now outstanding against the State. They probably reach $200,000 or $300,000. The State superintendent, Dr. Jilson, is a man of learning and honesty; but he can do little with such a mass of stupidity and corruption as the commissioners appointed by the Governor.

Alabama Conference.

OPELIKA, ALA., Dec. 9, 1874.

The forty-second session of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met in the Baptist church at Opelika on the ninth day of December, 1874, at nine o'clock A. M.

Bishop D. S. Doggot occupied the chair and opened the session with the usual religious exercises.

A large number of ministers and lay delegates appeared and took their seats, and the Conference completed its organization by the selection of Robert B. Crawford secretary, and Jas. M. Mason and G. Waverly Briggs assistant secretaries. The standing committees are as follows:

Books and Periodicals.—W. Shapard, E. M. Turner, C. B. DuBose, W. E. Kennedy, S. Perry.

Education.—E. Wadsworth, J. G. Molley, J. W. Rush, H. L. Hopper, R. S. Woodward, Levi W. Reeves, D. C. Crook, A. K. Ramsay, W. M. Winn, S. P. Smith, E. M. Bounds, W. H. Chambers, A. Dowling, B. F. Cassaday, J. M. Scott, P. D. Burford, W. F. Norton, J. H. Dunklin.

Memoirs.—T. F. Mangum, W. H. Wild, W. E. Kennedy.

Bible Cause.—J. W. Glenn, N. P. Dowling, D. J. Wright, W. W. Graham, E. M. Lazenby.

The secretary read a communication of length and great interest from Dr. A. H. Redford, agent of the Publishing House at Nashville, Tennessee, giving a detailed account of its financial condition, which was referred to the committee on books and periodicals.

A communication from Dr. Summers, secretary of the General Conference, as to the adoption of the "new rule" on the subject of temperance, was read, and on motion of Dr. A. H. Mitchell was made the order of the day for Monday next, at ten o'clock A. M. The proposed amendment is as follows:

Strike out of the General Rules the following clause, "Drunkenness, or drinking spirituous liquors, unless in cases of necessity," then substitute the following: "Making, buying, selling or using, as a beverage, intoxicating liquors."

Levi W. Reeves offered a resolution that when the question of the adoption of this amendment shall come up that the vote be taken without debate. Passed.

Dr. Linus Parker, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and Rev. W. W. Bays, of the Holston Conference, were introduced to the Conference by Bishop Doggett, and took seats among the members.

Dr. Thomas O. Summers, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, and Dr. Parker, made representations of the operations and prospects of their respective papers, exhibiting a high degree of prosperity, even amid the many troubles through which they have passed during the Conference year just closed.

The Conference then proceeded to regular disciplinary business, and question 20—Are all the preachers blameless in their life and administration?—was called.

Dr. M. S. Andrews offered the following:

Resolved, That in view of the pressure upon the missionary treasury, and also of the small salaries of many of the preachers, the Bishop be requested to so rearrange the general work that the number of presiding elders' districts shall not exceed seven.

After considerable debate, and a motion by Levi W. Reeves to table the resolution, which failed, the resolution, together with an amendment by Rev. J. Barker, was on motion of Dr. W. A. McCarty indefinitely postponed.

SECOND DAY.

OPELIKA, ALA., Dec. 10, 1874.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop Doggett in the chair. Divine service conducted by Rev. T. O. Summers, D. D.

Dr. C. D. Oliver, of the North Alabama Conference, and the Rev. Mr. Carroll, pastor of the Baptist church in this place, were introduced and invited to seats within the bar.

Rev. J. W. Jordan was appointed by the Conference to take charge of the business interests of the Southern Review.

A communication from Rev. R. J. Harp, publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, was read and referred to the committee on books and periodicals.

A. S. Andrews read the annual report from the faculty of the Southern University, which was referred to the committee on education.

Question 20 resumed.

Answer.—J. H. Lockhart.

Question 16.—Who are located this year?

THIRD DAY.

OPELIKA, ALA., Dec. 11, 1874.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment. Religious exercises by Rev. A. H. Mitchell.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D., secretary of the Missionary Society, and Rev. Mr. Sanders, of the Baptist Church, were introduced and invited to seats within the bar.

A communication from the missionary secretaries was read, after which Dr. McFerrin addressed the Conference on the subject of missions. Communication referred to the Board of Missions.

The Conference adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to prepare and present to the Conference a constitution for the Domestic Missionary Society.

M. S. ANDREWS.
J. W. RUSH.

The following, signed by J. W. Rush, M. S. Andrews and E. M. Bounds, was on motion referred to the board provided for in the above resolution:

Resolved, That hereafter the drafts of the Board of Missions be drawn in favor of the preachers appointed to the missions and circuits to which appropriations shall be made, and not in the name of the presiding elder.

Resolved, That the sense of this Conference is that the presiding elders shall not share the funds appropriated to particular charges in their districts.

Question 1.—Who are admitted on trial?

Answer.—John O. Keener, Richard S. Holcombe, Christopher H. Kelly, James M. Crews, Ritchie J. Briggs, Miles M. Dawson, F. M. Peterson, John P. Sanders, James S. Rencher, Robert J. Walker and Andrew J. Lamar.

Question 5.—Who are readmitted?

Answer.—None.

Question 2.—Who remain on trial?

Answer.—Preston G. Nash, Leander C. Calhoun, G. Waverly Briggs, William A. Rice, John A. Green, Wade H. Wetherby, Thomas Y. Abernathy, Joshua S. Peavy and Ransen A. Mears.

Bishop Doggett announced the following committee to draft the constitution of the Domestic Mission Board: M. S. Andrews, Thomas O. Summers, E. Wadsworth, Theopilus Mangum and J. W. Rush.

The board of managers of the Alabama Conference Female College presented their report, which was referred to the committee on education.

Conference adjourned with the benediction by the Bishop.

Notes from the Field.

TIMES OF REFRESHING.

In all the heathen world the missionaries seem to be longing for a visitation from on high. Their letters are aflame with the spirit of prayer. They are waiting as the disciples did before the pentecostal outpouring. And they call on the churches at home to besiege the throne of grace. One cannot read the missionary journals for the last few months without being deeply impressed that the missionaries are praying in an agony of earnestness. The revival in Scotland, and the awakenings in Calcutta, Bombay and Madras, have done much to quicken their zeal; but, outside of and above such influences, there seems to be another and a higher—God is moving them to pray mightily. It would be easy to fill your paper with extracts from letters expressing this longing for a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Here is one paragraph from a letter in the London Missionary Herald, for November, written from Delhi, India:

"These are seasons of refreshing to us, and repay for years of toil. The 'Lord's arm is not shortened, that it cannot save.' There is a sound of abundance of rain; the Lord open our hearts to receive it. We had nine baptisms on the first Sabbath in this month. Channi had the great privilege of baptizing his sister. She was for years a bitter opponent, but the Lord has opened her heart, as he did Lydia's of old. Lubha Chund has just returned from a month's preaching tour, and is full of hope as to the spread of the gospel. We have been pleading for a blessing such as has been realized in Scotland, and we expect to get it. You will be glad to learn that there has been an appearance of revival among the Europeans all over the country. Calcutta, Dinapore, Allahabad, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Agra, Delhi, Dugshai, Chakrata and other places have been receiving especial blessings. I hope the English churches will be stirred up to especial prayer for India." Why should not all churches be moved to earnest prayer for the glorious revelation of the saving power of the gospel? What if we have no missionaries in India? Our brethren of other churches have. Christ's church is one—their cause is our cause, because it is Christ's. Surely here are "good tidings from a far country." We know very little about these cities in distant India; but in Christ Jesus we are brought near to them. For there the "day-spring from on high has risen;" there the Spirit is working; there souls are being saved; there Immanuel's kingdom is being established; there the powers of darkness are being overturned. It is Christ's work, and it concerns us all. How the whole church militant should rejoice in these bulletins of victory from the brave bands that lead the advance!

And God is encouraging us to ask him for a blessing on our mission in China. On the fifteenth of September Bro. Lambuth dedicated our new chapel, that they have named "The Church of the Glad News." He says: "The house was filled with eager listeners, who kept perfect order the whole time. At the close of the sermon two adults, and four children of Christian parents, were baptized. One man came sixteen miles to be baptized and received into the church. About forty native Christians met with us around the table of the Lord, some of whom had come eighty and one hundred and fifty miles to be present at the dedication of our little church." And our brethren in China are praying for revival power. Let the church at home join them in that prayer, and the God of all grace will hear and save. A. G. H.

MISSION-ROOMS, Nashville, Dec. 1.

A MANUAL OF THE DISCIPLINE OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH, including the Decisions of the College of Bishops, and Rules of Order applicable to Ecclesiastical Courts and Conferences. By Holland N. McTyeire, D. D., one of the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Nashville, Tennessee: A. H. Redford, Agent.—A new edition of this work has just been issued, embodying some changes occasioned by the action of the late General Conference, and containing the episcopal decisions, ordered to be published. We hope every preacher and official member, at least, will procure this work; indeed we do not see how they can get along without it. Much that has been written on the temperance question might have been spared if the writers had been aware of the following decision of the Bishops, which is printed in the Manual, pages 262, 263:

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

"In a case of arraignment and trial, the accused admitted that he was engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors by the quantity and by the drink, with the reasonable knowledge that it is bought to be used as a beverage, but his defense was that there was no law violated. He appealed from the sentence of the church committee, by which he was expelled, to the Quarterly Conference. The action and decision of the court below were sustained in the Quarterly Conference. The expelled person desired that the case might come before the Bishop presiding at the Annual Conference; and to give his wish effect the Quarterly Conference, although deeming the verdict and judgment just, under the construction of the law rendered, appealed from the decision of the presiding elder to the Bishop presiding at the ensuing Annual Conference, upon the question of law: Does the sale of intoxicating liquors, by the large or small quantity, to be used as a beverage, constitute an actionable offense under Methodist law as found in the article of the General Rules requiring the avoidance of evil of every kind, and the doing of no harm; these General Rules themselves being based upon the written word of God? The plea of the absence of specific law was relied on by the defendant in the case referred to. The ruling of the preacher in charge was that the case was actionable under the General Rule; and this ruling was sustained by the presiding elder on the appeal.

"Decided, That both were correct in the ruling. (1874.")—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Periodicals.

WE HAVE received six additional parts of Potter's Complete Bible Encyclopedia, extending from part 19 to 24 inclusive. The high character of this great work, as exhibited in the parts previously received and noticed, is fully sustained. The engravings are very superior, and the range of information is wide and accurate. The twenty-four parts thus far issued contain 784 pages, and we believe that the work is expected by the publishers to be completed in about fifty parts in all. The work is edited by Rev. William Blackwood, D. D., LL. D. It will contain, when done, nearly three thousand illustrative engravings by the best artists. John E. Potter & Co., publishers, Philadelphia.

THE PARISH CHOIR is a monthly publication of church music, published by Rev. C. L. Hutchins, Medford, Massachusetts. It is a publication of great merit. We have received the first twelve numbers.

HOW IS THAT?—A lady, says the Western Christian Advocate, who was present at a recent convention held exclusively by women, in behalf of a great and good cause, says: "I could not give you an accurate account of yesterday's proceedings, and doubt if any one could; and I doubt if you would publish much of it if given. The session was remarkably spirited and stormy for one held by Christian women. I will take back all I have ever said in favor of woman suffrage, and never wish to see women in politics, or certainly not more than one at a time. I find that they can be as selfish in serving the Master as men are in political matters. Do men ever do such things, at Conference, for instance?"

From our experience and observation, we are firmly of the opinion that a very large proportion of good people have many and great infirmities, and that it is a sure sign of a very advanced stage of piety when selfishness is even dethroned and subjugated, to say nothing of its being eliminated. To have "the glory of God" always as the controlling motive, and "in honor to prefer one another," are rare attainments. Who of us are seeking to possess them!

CHRISTIAN life in a church is to be known by the awakening of all good Christian energies. Every one should be ready to serve the holy cause of Christ with his gift.—Heubner.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1874.

CAMP MEETING AT McCOMB CITY, MISS.

October's day was at its height,
And shining with his mellow light,
Old Phœbus, his radiance bright,
Upon a woodland scenery.

Unaw a rough, rude shed arrayed
Beneath the forest's grateful shade,
And learned that here, all undismay'd,
Encamped Messiah's chivalry.

No gleaming armor met the eye,
No banners shone against the sky,
No hurrying squadrons, charging by,
Attested war's proximity.

My ear drank in no trumpet note,
Heard no exciting echoes float
From thundering drum or bugle's throat,
That told of martial empiry.

But sweeter sounds than these now came,
Than those which follow war's red name—
A thousand voices swelled the strain
In sweet, inspiring melody.

Strong men stood there in manhood's prime,
And age lent, too, its faltering chime,
While woman's silvery voice kept time
Amid the vocal minstrelsy.

They sang of no grim warrior brave
Who marshal'd millions to the grave,
But of that King who died to save
The sons of lost humanity.

And as those songs rose deep and high
In pealing anthems to the sky,
My heart felt its Redeemer nigh—
Threw down its ancient enmity.

It seemed as if the seraphs fair,
That sit enthroned in upper air,
Had come below, the scene to share
Beneath that leafen canopy.

Like incense on the morning air,
Now rose the sacred voice of prayer,
And every Christian bending there
Felt panoplied for victory.

There woman's voice, like prophet's lyre,
In prayer sent up its living fire,
Till, mingling in the seraph choir,
'Twas lost in heaven's immensity.

With all her life work proudly done,
May she find crown and garland won,
And round the Savior's burnished throne
Meet all her household treasury.

(Oh, woman's prayers and woman's tears!
What wonders in this world of fears
Have they not wrought? Whole hemispheres
Have brightened 'neath their purity.)

'Twas thus of old the patriarchs prayed,
'Twas thus the martyrs cried for aid
When pagan altars saw them flayed
For owning Christ's supremacy.

Now hallelujahs rose above
This scene, where mortals seemed to prove
Their Savior; and his dying love
Became their all of ecstasy.

More than one heart, to sin a slave,
Here felt the Spirit's power to save,
Here learned the foes of sin to brave,
And spurn life's empty pageantry.

Those songs, those prayers—they linger yet
Around my mind in retrospect,
And will till life's last sun shall set
Upon this earthly memory.

Then may I hear those songs again
Swell sweetly o'er the heavenly plain,
And swell on high the loud "Amen"
Amid that blissful company.

Physical Cause of the Death of Christ.

MR. EDITOR: Anything on the above subject is of interest to those who are devoted to him. The following bibliographical notice of a late reprint of "Stroud's Physical Cause of the Death of Christ" I find in the Richmond and Louisville Medical Journal, by E. S. Gaillard, M. D. I have read it with deep interest, and must say that I give in to the hypothesis, from the facts given in Scripture, attending the dark hour of his death. Believing that others will be as intensely interested as I have been, I do not know that I could better devote the time I now have than to transcribing it for your interesting and valuable paper.

THE NOTICE.

This old yet remarkable and interesting volume is well worthy of the careful examination of every physician. The physical and physiological questions discussed, and the pathological as well as psycological problems elucidated, are of extreme interest and importance. Those whose interest in medicine is not confined to recipes connected with the pestle and mortar, or limited to the practical considerations of the ledger and cash-book, will find this volume of Stroud unusually attractive. The mere tradesman in medicine cannot be advised to purchase it. The following letter, addressed by James Begbie, M. D., F. R. S. E., physician to the Queen, etc., to Dr. Hanna, author of another life of Christ, will be found interesting:

"I cannot help accepting as correct the explanation which Dr. Stroud has offered, and which you have adopted and so strikingly applied, of the physical cause of the death of Christ—namely, rupture of the heart, and consequent effusion of blood into the pericardium, the investing sheath of that organ.

"Such a lesion accounts for the phenomena recorded in Scriptures regarding him—namely, the earlier than usual cessation of life during crucifixion, and the issuing of blood and water on the piercing of his side with the spear.

"It must be borne in mind, however, that rupture of the heart is comparatively a rare affection, and that the cases of it on record are, so far as I know, limited to those advanced in life, or to such as have been laboring under some degeneration of the structure of the organ, a condition which rendered it liable to be torn when subjected to the pressure of severe physical exertion, or the weight of mental agony. Now in regard to Christ we know that at the period of his death he was in the prime of life; and that as morally he was "holy, harmless and undefiled," so physically he was without spot or blemish. How intensely does this consideration magnify the sufferings he endured! We see him in the agony in the garden, and under the bloody sweat. We follow him to Calvary, and see him under the hiding of his Father's face, bearing our sins in his own body on the tree. We cannot estimate the anguish of his holy human soul during these awful hours, when there was drawn from him that most touching language: 'My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death;' but we can in some measure understand how his bodily frame, subjected to the full weight both of mental and bodily suffering, should yield and give way at the fountain of life, and how Christ, in his death, should thus literally fulfill the prophetic word of the Old Testament writings concerning him: 'Reproach hath broken my heart,' I shrink from treading farther on this sacred ground, and remain, etc.,

J. BEGBIE.

EDINBURG, April 26, 1862."

As all papers from Sir James Y. Simpson have now a double interest, the following letter from himself to Dr. Hanna will be appreciated. It is replete with wisdom and full of instruction.

"Ever since reading, some ten or twelve years ago, Dr. Stroud's remarkable treatise on the 'Physical Cause of the Death of Christ,' I have been strongly impressed with the belief that the views which he adopted (Dr. Stroud himself points out that Russel, Edwards, Rambach and other writers had more or less anticipated him in the belief that Christ had died from rupture or breaking of the heart) and maintained on this subject are fundamentally correct. Nor has this opinion been in any way altered by a perusal of some later observations published on the same question, both here and on the Continent. That the immediate cause of the death of our blessed Savior was, speaking medically, laceration or rupture of the heart, is a doctrine in regard to which there can be no absolute certainty; but assuredly in favor of it there is a very high amount of circumstantial probability. Let me try to state the arguments for this view in the form of a few brief propositions:

"1. His death was not the mere result of crucifixion, for, first, the period was too short; a person in the prime of life, as Christ was, not dying from this mode of mortal punishment in six hours, as he died, but usually surviving till the second or third day, or even longer. Secondly, the attendant phenomena at the time of actual death were different from those of crucifixion. The crucified die, as is well known, under a lingering process of gradual exhaustion, weakness and faintness. On the contrary, Christ cried with a loud voice, and spoke once and again; all apparently within a few minutes of his dissolution.

"2. No known injury, lesion, or disease of the brain, lungs or other vital organs could, I believe, account for such a sudden termination of his sufferings in death, except, first, arrestment of the action of the heart by fatal fainting or syncope; or, second, rupture of the walls of the heart or larger blood vessels issuing from it.

"3. The attendant symptoms—particularly the loud cry and subsequent exclamations—show that death was not the effect of mortal faluting, or mere fatal arrestment of the action of the heart by syncope.

"4. On the other hand, these symptome were such as have been seen in cases of rupture of the walls of the heart. Thus in the latest book published in the English language on diseases of the heart, the eminent author, Dr. Walshe, professor of medicine in University College, London, when treating of the symptoms indicating death by rupture of the heart, observes: 'The hand is suddenly carried to the front of the chest, a piercing shriek uttered,' etc. The rapidity of the resulting death is regulated by the size and shape of the ruptured opening. But usually death very speedily ensues in consequence of the blood escaping from the interior of the heart into the cavity of the large surrounding heart sack or pericardium; which sack has, in cases of rupture of the heart, been found on dissection to contain sometimes two, three, four or more pounds of blood accumulated within it, and separated into red clot and limpid serum, or 'blood and water,' as is seen in blood when collected out of the body in a cup or basin, in the operation of common blood-letting.

"5. No medical jurist would in a court of law venture to assert, from the mere symptome preceding death, that a person had certainly died of rupture of the heart. To obtain positive proof that rupture of the heart was the cause of death, a post mortem examination of the chest would be necessary. In ancient times such dissections were not practiced. But the details left regarding Christ's death are most strikingly peculiar in this respect: that they offer us the result of a very rude dissection, as it were by the gash* made in his side after death by the thrust of the Roman soldier's spear. The effect of that wounding or piercing of the side was an escape of 'blood and water,' visible to the Apostle John, standing some distance off, and I do not believe that anything could possibly account for this appearance, as described by that apostle, except a collection of blood effused into the distended sack of the pericardium in consequence of rupture of the heart, and afterward separated, as is usual with extravasted blood, into those two parts, viz.: First, crassamentum, or red clot; and second, watery serum. The subsequent puncture from below of the distended pericardium would most certainly, under such circumstances, lead to the immediate ejection and escape of its sanguineous contents, in the form of red clots of blood and a stream of watery serum, exactly corresponding to that description given in the sacred narrative—and 'forthwith came there out blood and water,' an appearance which no other natural event or mode of death can explain or account for.

"6. Mental emotions and passions are well known by all to affect the actions of the heart in the way of palpitation, fainting, etc. That these emotions and passions, when in overwhelming excess, occasionally though rarely produce laceration or rupture of the walls of the heart, is stated by most medical authorities who have written on the affections of this organ; and our poets even allude to this effect as an established fact:

"'The grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.'

"But if ever a human heart was riven and ruptured by the mere amount of mental agony that was endured, it would surely—we might even argue a priori—be that our Redeemer, who, during these dark and dreadful hours on the cross, he, being made a 'curse for us,' 'bore our griefs and carried our sorrows,' and suffered for sin, the malediction of God and man, 'full of anguish,' and 'now exceeding sorrowful, even unto death.'

"There are theological as well as medical arguments in favor of the opinion that Christ in reality died from a ruptured or broken heart. You know them infinitely better than I do. But let me merely observe that:

"7. If the various wondrous prophecies and minute predictions in Psalms xxii and lxix, regarding the circumstances connected with Christ's death, be justly held literally true, such as: 'They pierced my hands and my feet;' 'They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture,' etc.; why should we regard as merely metaphorical, and not as literally true, also the declarations in the same Psalms: 'Reproach hath broken my heart;' 'My heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.' And

"8. Death by mere crucifixion was not a form of death in which there was much, if indeed any, shedding of blood. Punctured wounds do not generally bleed; and the nails, besides being driven through parts that were not provided with large blood vessels, necessarily remained, plugging up the openings made by their passage.

"The whole language and types of Scripture, however, involve the idea that the atonement for our sins was obtained by the blood of Christ shed for us during his death on the cross: 'Without the shedding of blood there is no remission.' This shedding, however, was assuredly done in the fullest possible sense, under the view that the immediate cause of his dissolution was rupture of the heart, and the consequent fatal escape of his heart and life blood from the central cistern of the circulation.

"It has always appeared, to my medical mind at least, that this view of the mode by which death was produced in the human body of Christ intensifies all our thoughts and ideas regarding the immensity of the astounding sacrifice which he made for our sinful race upon the cross.

"Nothing can possibly be more striking and startling than the appalling and terrible passiveness with which God as man submitted, for our sakes, his incarnate body to all the horrors and tortures of the crucifixion.

"But our wonderment at the stupendous sacrifice only increases when we reflect that, while thus enduring for our sins the most cruel and agonizing form of corporeal death, he was ultimately 'slain,' not by the effects of the anguish of his corporeal frame, but by the effects of the mightier anguish of his mind; the fleshly walls of his heart—like the vail, as it were, in the temple of his human body—becoming rent and riven, as for us 'he poured out his soul unto death;' 'the travail of his soul,' in that awful hour, thus standing out as unspeakably bitterer and more dreadful than even the travail of his body.

J. Y. SIMPSON, M. D.

EDINBURG, May 1, 1862."

Thus we see, as science advances, great and important facts are discovered and developed from the Scriptures. In regard to the remark of the inspired and prophetic psalmist, "Reproach hath broken my heart," it has heretofore been regarded as an expression by which the stupendous grief of the Savior was understood. Science has as clearly established as anything can be—by a strong chain of circumstantial evidence—that the heart of our blessed Savior was broken, as any fact, not positively known, can be.

The pouring out of the "blood and water" could not have taken place in any other way. The ruptured heart, letting its contents into the pericardium; the blood separating into serum and crassamentum; the crassamentum floating in the serum; the left side of the Savior penetrated by the spear, reaching the pericardium, and breaking the crassamentum, explains without a doubt how this outpouring of the blood of the holy sufferer transpired.

Cannot Bro. Harp procure a few copies? This remarkable work of Stroud has been recently reprinted by the Messrs. Appleton in the best manner. It will form a valuable addition to the library of the theologian as well as the physiologist.

Yours truly,

JOHN SAMPLE, M. D.

Holiness.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote an article, some time ago, on church membership, which was misunderstood by some of the brethren. I wrote another explaining it, and was again misapprehended. Several brethren in private letters have requested me to write again. I am glad to see the young men stirred up on the doctrine of the church. Bro. Montgomery attempts a criticism on my incidental remarks on holiness. He thinks I follow close in the track of Dr. Bledsoe. I am glad to be found in such good company. I have not seen the Review for a year, nor have I read only a page here and there in the Theodicy. I always do my own thinking and writing. Bro. Montgomery quotes from Mr. Watson, not on holiness, but on depravity. I will refer to what Mr. Watson says on holiness, Institutes, volume 1, page 436, chapter 7: "Holiness in creatures" (and Adam was a creature) "is conformity to the will of God, as revealed in his law." God is holiness itself. "Thou only art holy"—life itself, esse, not derived being. The moon is the image of the sun, not the sun—only the recipient of light, relative light. Man was created (rather formed) in the image of God. Man can only be relatively holy. If created holy, then he would have been holiness itself; then natural to him; and if natural, then necessary; and if necessary, then not holiness in any moral sense of conformity of will to the will of God, but natural obedience, etc. Mr. Wesley says love is holiness. He means sincere love to God in obedience to his law. He can mean nothing else. St. Paul says: "Love not the world." Then the use of love contrary to the law is sin. The love of God cannot create holiness in man; for God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, but the world is not holy. God wills even our sanctification; and if God could create holiness, then all men would be holy, for he declares that he wills it. The Savior would have saved Jerusalem, but he could not. And why? Because they would not. I quote again from Mr. Wesley: "In 1729 two young men, reading the Bible, saw they could not be saved without holiness, and in 1737 they saw that holiness was obtained by faith; and when satan could no more hinder the work, he threw Calvinism in the way, and then Antinomianism, which strikes at the very root of holiness." Mr. Wesley declares that Calvinism and Antiuemianism strike at the very foundations of holiness. What is the fundamental doctrine of Calvinism? Is it not created holiness? Does not Calvin teach that God, by his sovereign power, without faith or repentance, regenerates the sinner, and then he is convicted, repents, believes and perseveres to the end? The Methodists teach that holiness in man consists in conformity to the nature and will of God.

As all the prismatic colors, duly concentrated, constitute a pure white light, so the blending of all the Christian graces and virtues constitute moral perfection or holiness in man.—Watson's Dictionary. God offers holiness to all men in Christ by faith, and it is as necessary for man to accept by faith of the holiness offered (to be holy) as for God to offer it. "He that believeth shall be saved." It is as necessary for man to drink water to slake his thirst as it was for God to make the water. Mr. Wesley says: Why are we not more holy? Because we are enthusiastic, looking for the end without the means. No man was ever made holy contrary to his will, and no man was ever holy who did not will to be so, and practice holiness with faith in Christ. God has ordained the means—not the end, but the means to the end, and the end can only be reached through the means. Preachers have ceased to preach created holiness, imputed sin and imputed righteousness; but men have not ceased to believe those doctrines. They have been the curse of the Christian world from the days of St. Augustine until to-day. Christianity has made more progress in the last hundred years, by preaching holiness by faith, than was made in twelve hundred years in preaching holiness by predestination and created holiness. The doctrine of effectual calling or created holiness is now more in the way of the success of the gospel than all the other sins and errors combined. Men and women of sense, who are prudent and thoughtful on all other subjects, fail to act in matters of their salvation. And why? Not because of any natural defect, because they are prudent in all other matters. It is their doctrine. Ask them why they remain out of the church, and they will tell you for want of pre-eminent grace, as if Christ had not died or the Holy Spirit had never come. They will tell you they do not feel and they do not wish to act the hypocrite. They do not feel, because God has not made them feel against their will, and without the means. Bro. Montgomery says he is in good company when he is with President Edwards and Dr. Watson. Mr. Watson, in my judgment, was in bad company when he called to his aid President Edwards. I would prefer Dr. Taylor, with his sophistry, to Edwards, with his created holiness and infant damnation, etc. Bro. Montgomery says he admires Dr. Bledsoe, but his views should be received with allowance. Pity but the General Conference had known it. Little boats should keep near the shore.

S. P. RICHARDSON.

THE BLOOM OF AGE.—A good woman never grows old. Years may pass over her head, but if benevolence and virtue dwell in the heart she is as cheerful as when the spring of life first opened to her view. When we look on a good woman we never think of her age; she looks as charming as when the rose of youth first bloomed on her cheek. That has not faded yet; it will never fade. In her neighborhood she is the friend and benefactor; in the church, the devout worshiper and exemplary Christian. Who does not respect and love the woman who has passed her days in kindness—who has been the friend of man—and whose life has been a scene of kindness and love, a devotion to truth and religion? We repeat, such a woman cannot grow old. She will always be fresh and buoyant in spirits, and active in humble deeds and benevolence. If the young lady desires the beauty and bloom of youth, let her not yield to the sway of fashion and folly; let her love truth and virtue, and to the close of life she will retain those feelings which now make life appear a garden of sweets, ever fresh and ever new.

WHATEVER throws the heart out of self, and swallows it up into some noble or beautiful idea, affords to the moralist precisely that which he wants, but cannot get within his own science. Enthusiasm is the life of morality; and to excite a pure and reasonable enthusiasm is the great moral end of religion.—F. W. Newman.

WE ARE here not only for our personal salvation, not only for our own personal development, but to transmit the earth to those who follow us a little fairer and more sweet and wholesome for our having lived upon it.—J. W. Chadwick.

SOME good people neglect their Christian duty, and are scarcely aware of it; yet do not attach any importance to it, because they have not enough of life to make them sensitive.

A FRENCH paper asserts that 3,000,000 pilgrims visited Lourdes and similar French places in 1873.

DIED, at his residence near Bethel camp ground, DeSoto parish, Louisiana, Mr. S. W. HIGGINBOTHAM. He was born in Alabama, July 4, 1849, and died October 26, 1874, aged twenty-five years, three months and twenty-two days. He was a strict member of the Baptist Church, and died in the hope of eternal salvation, believing that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, died that we all might live.

BRO. D. S. WARD died, at his residence near Lake Charles, Calcasieu parish, Louisiana, on Wednesday, November 11, 1874. He was born in Norfolk county, Virginia, on the fifteenth of January, 1810. In July last he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South by letter, having been a member of the Baptist Church for twenty-three years. Bro. Ward was an humble servant of Christ, and has no doubt gone to his reward. His end was peace.

MRS. MARY BEATRICE STONE, daughter of James A. and Rebecca Wall, and wife of Barton W. Stone, was born in Wetumpka, Alabama, December 10, 1833, and died in Montgomery county, Alabama, November 10, 1874, in the forty-first year of her age.

In her youth, before she attained the age of womanhood, she was awakened by the gospel, and sought successfully the grace of justification. This gift was accompanied by evidences which were convincing, and her memory clung to them so tenaciously that she told her pastor, one week before her death, she had no doubt with respect to the fact of her conversion. Soon after her conversion she joined the Methodist Church, and in it she held her membership until her translation to eternity. It pleased God, in the operation of his providence, to subject her to protracted and severe sickness. In a journey to visit her relatives, several years ago, she was attacked by a cold, which produced bronchitis that proved to be incurable. With this she suffered so steadily and severely that life itself became a burden and death a welcome messenger.

She was married to her husband September 21, 1865, and lived with him in the tender relation of wife more than nine years.

THE following resolutions were adopted by the fourth Quarterly Conference of Beauregard circuit, Mississippi Conference, October 24, 1874:

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his providence, to remove from our midst and from our communion our aged and beloved brethren, THOMAS G. CARTER, who died August 17, 1874, and SAMUEL C. SMITH, who died August 28, the first a member of the church for more than fifty years and an exhorter therein, and the latter a steward of the Wesson church; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of these brethren the church has been deprived of faithful and efficient laborers, and the community of worthy examples of godly living.

Resolved, That while we lament their loss we bear our testimony to their worth, and magnify the grace of God which enabled them to lead useful lives, "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," which beautified their old age with Christian light and hope, and gave them the victory over the last enemy.

Resolved, That these expressions of our feelings be spread on the minutes of this Quarterly Conference, and that a copy be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, with a request that the same be published therein.

DIED, in Tuskaloosa, Alabama, on the morning of November 21, WILLIE BELLE HARLAN, of Noxubee county, Mississippi, aged fifteen years and nine months.

She was a pupil of the Tuskaloosa Female College, and, although an inmate of the institution but a few weeks, she had won the esteem and love of teachers and schoolmates. She was a person of lovely character, affectionate and amiable in disposition. She had been suffering with chills before leaving home, and her system was charged with malarious poison, which developed itself in a severe case of hematuria—commonly called yellow disease or yellow chills—of which she died after an illness of about ten days. Her mother was telegraphed for on the first announcement of the nature of her illness; and was with her nearly a week before her death. It was a consolation to the mother to know that her daughter was a member of the church, and gave expression to religious sentiments shortly before her death. The last composition which she read in class before her fatal sickness was upon the subject of home, in which she made a touching allusion to the home in heaven. She told her mother that she loved Jesus; and the hope that she is now in that heavenly home to which her thoughts had so recently been wandering, and with that Jesus whom she loved, will comfort and sustain her mother more than all else. The president of the college and the whole family of teachers and pupils are in deep grief at their loss, and most heartily sympathize with the noble Christian mother and loving brothers and sisters in their terrible bereavement. Farewell, dear Willie Belle! A smile rested upon thy face after life was extinct—a beautiful token and evidence that heaven had revealed its glories to thy vision in the moment of departure.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

MISS CALISTA, daughter of Rev. W. A. and Mrs. Elizabeth Montgomery, was born October 18, 1858, and departed this life October 29, 1874, aged sixteen years and eleven days.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." In commemorating the death of our departed friend and sister we are forced to the conclusion that when God, in his mysterious ways, saw proper [illegible] right to deprive us in our Sa[illegible] school, church, and even in so[illegible] of one of our best scholars, [illegible] and associates, it was for her good [illegible] gain. And, though we saw [illegible] placed among the clods, yet we [illegible] to think she is with us yet; [illegible] going into Sabbath school, at [illegible] the organ's sweet-sounding [illegible] greet our ears, we sometimes be[illegible] and turn to see if it is not respon[illegible] to the gentle touch of the cru[illegible] and beautiful maiden. But, [illegible] Parents, brothers, sisters, friend[illegible] who was once encased in beau[illegible] clay, made active by life, is not [illegible] us now. She envies not our po[illegible] to-day. She feels no inclinati[illegible] join these songs of ours, for ete[illegible] is her home, Jehovah is her f[illegible] angels are her associates. No [illegible] does she touch the keys of a [illegible] toned organ, for she strikes u[illegible] harp of praise to God and the [illegible] that sends its sweet, harmo[illegible] strains from wall to wall of hea[illegible] great church. Missing her e[illegible] where, and especially in our Sab[illegible] school, we offer the following:

Resolved, That in the death o[illegible] beloved scholar, organist and a[illegible] ate, we, the Methodist Epis[illegible] Sunday school of Autaugaville, [illegible] sustained a loss which we deepl[illegible] plore, and shall miss her sadly [illegible] we bow submissively to this pa[illegible] dispensation of the divine will [illegible] feel that the Lord doeth all t[illegible] well.

Resolved, That this school he[illegible] tender to the sorrowing family o[illegible] deceased our deepest sympath[illegible] the irreparable loss they have [illegible] tained, and in testimony of w[illegible] we direct that they be furni[illegible] with a copy of these resolutions, [illegible] the same be recorded upon the re[illegible] book of the Sabbath school, and [illegible] to the NEW ORLEANS CHRIS[illegible] ADVOCATE for publication.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The President and his staff visited King Kalakaua to-day. The visit was brief but cordial.

READING, Dec. 19.—The iron works of the Great Western railway burned to-day. Four hundred men are thereby thrown out of employment.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—A World's special from Bismarck, Dakota, says General F. Custar arrested the Indian murderer named Ringface, two days ago. It caused great excitement among the Indians, and some one thousand of them threatened trouble, but they were quieted down for the time being. This morning Custar was hurriedly applied to for troops, as the Indians were removing their families, and had killed many cattle, and meant mischief. A detachment of the Seventh Cavalry was sent to the Standing Rock agency to protect it.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The Mississippi delegation in the interest of levees, consisting of Judge Jeffries, Colonel Haycraft and Colonel Bruce, Federal senator elect, visited the President to-day. These gentlemen previously visited the commission upon levees.

The President favored a general system of levees, as partial systems, while protecting one portion, damaged another, and that to make the system effectual there must be concert. The committee speak highly of the President's knowledge of what is requisite to save the alluvial lands bordering on the Mississippi, its tributaries and its outlets.

A Presidential proclamation, dated to-day, commands all disorderly persons in Warren county, Mississippi, and Vicksburg, to return to their homes and abstain from forcible resistance to the law, and submit themselves to the lawful authority of that county and State.

Lewis E. Parsons was nominated as district judge of Alabama, vice Busteed, resigned.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—A special to the Post from Berlin says it is positively asserted that Bismarck tendered his resignation, which was refused. He afterward conferred with the leaders of the National party regarding the future conduct of affairs in Parliament, and an understanding was secured.

HONG KONG, Dec. 19.—The Pacific mail steamer Japan burned at sea. It is feared many lives were lost. The Japan had four hundred Chinamen, and only four cabin passengers.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—Count Von Arnim has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment, including the month during which he has been under arrest.

BERLIN, Dec. 20.—It is stated that Von Arnim's sentence involves no disgrace, and it is generally believed the Emperor will pardon him.

HAVANA, Dec. 20.—Carlos Garcia, a noted bandit, and all his followers have laid down their arms, and thrown themselves on the clemency of the government.

The coming sugar crop is reported to be unprecedentedly large, and is expected to be the largest ever produced in Cuba.

GENERAL SHERMAN'S report as General of the army states that the entire force of enlisted men, October 15, was twenty-six thousand four hundred and forty-one, which would be reduced by January 1 next to twenty-five thousand, the number limited by law. He considers the army as greatly impaired in its efficiency by the reduction, and says that our army is the hardest-worked body of men in the or any other country. By the extraordinary activity of the troops and the good sense of the officers the frontier, he says, has been kept comparatively safe. On the northern line of Texas and the southern line of Kansas the Indian agents confessed their inability to manage the Indians by the usual humane and Christian treatment, and were turned over to the War Department and committed to the management of General Sheridan, who, General Sherman thinks, has taught the savages a lesson which will enable the agents to bring them within the sphere of humanization, if not of civilization. In General Sheridan's report of his operations he attributes the Indian troubles to the immunity with which the Indians have been treated. He does not think the troubles can be justly charged upon the settlers or inhabitants of the frontier, whose interest it is to have peace. Nor does he think the recent outbreaks originated by the actions of bad white men or the sale of whisky to the Indians by traders; but believes them to have been the result of the restless and untamed nature of the Indians themselves, who have no profession but arms, and naturally resort to war and plunder.

THE use of carrier pigeons for press purposes is on the increase, and the breed is rapidly improving. By careful "selection," and allowing only the "survival of the fittest," powers have been developed which a few years ago would have been thought impossible. They can be specially trained to fly over five hundred miles, and it is no uncommon thing for dispatches to be brought to London from Paris, Lisbon or Brussels.

A LITTLE BOY heard his mother tell of eighteen head of cattle being burned the other night. "Weren't their tails burned also?" he inquired.

SELMA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—The preachers will make every effort to be at their work the first Sabbath in January, and commence at once upon our missionary assessment. The necessity for early collections is great.

The several boards of stewards will be pleased to make an earnest effort to pay their pastors one-fourth of their assessments on or before the first quarterly meeting, that these men of God may be freed from all temporal embarrassment, and have nothing to do but "preach the word."

A. J. BRIGGS, P. E.

OPELIKA, December 16, 1874.

DELAY not repentance one moment, for if you repent not this present day you will have a day more to repent of and a day less to repent in.

Mississippi Conference.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Dec. 16, 1874.

The fifty-ninth session of the Mississippi Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met in the courthouse, in the town of Hazlehurst, on Wednesday, December 16, 1874, at nine o'clock A. M., and was opened with religious exercises by Bishop Paine, assisted by Rev. B. Jones.

The roll was called and a large number of members appeared and answered to their names.

Rev. C. G. Andrews was nominated and elected secretary; Rev. J. A. B. Jones, assistant secretary; J. T. Cameron, recording secretary; Rev. J. J. Smylie, statistical secretary.

The presiding elders were requested to act as a nominating committee to report names for the standing committees of the Conference. After retiring for a few minutes they reported the following:

On Public Worship.—W. E. M. Linfield, W. E. Ballard and J. F. Enochs.

On Education.—J. W. Adkins, W. Wadeworth, D. A. J. Parker, L. Kendall, A. M. Campbell, G. W. Chatfield, T. Price and E. C. Postell.

On the State of the Church.—W. L. C. Hunnicutt, R. D. Norsworthy, E. A. Flowers, U. B. Phillips, R. A. Sibley, D. A. Givens, D. P. Bradford and P. A. Johnson.

On the Bible Cause.—W. H. Leith, R. J. Jones, J. A. B. Jones, P. Howard, S. B. Watts, H. J. Harris and C. S. Stewart.

On Temperance.—I. Miller, E. W. Dillehay, J. H. Shelton, D. G. W. Ellis, J. E. Jagers, C. S. Stewart, A. Day and H. Moore.

On Religious Literature.—J. G. Jones, J. M. Weems, H. W. Featherstun, J. W. Gann, L. Carley, J. Williams, R. B. Dowuer and E. R. Strickland.

Rev. R. B. Downer was appointed a special committee to attend to the interests of the Publishing House at Nashville, and receive moneys for all our church publications which may not be represented at this Conference.

A special committee on publishing the minutes was appointed—C. G. Andrewe, W. B. Lewis and A. B. Stewart.

The Bishop laid before the Conference the action of the General Conference on the subject of changing the General Rules on the subject of drinking spirituous liquors, and this subject was made the order of the day for next Saturday at ten o'clock A. M., and it was resolved that the vote on this subject shall be taken without debate.

The Conference took up question 2.—Who remain on trial? Albert T. Tidwell passed, and was continued on trial.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Dec. 17, 1874.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop Paine in the chair. Religious services by Rev. W. B. Hines.

Dr. L. Parker presented the report of the publisher of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, which was read and referred to the committee on church literature.

Rev. T. J. Waine, corresponding secretary of the Baptist Board of Missions of Mississippi, was introduced to the Conference.

The Conference then took up question 4.—Who are admitted into full connection? J. W. Ellison, Joseph B. K. Smith (C. C. Watkins passed and continued in his present relation,) George W. Gilmore, James W. McLaurin, Thomas S. West, Ralph Bradley, passed, admitted and elected to deacon's orders.

W. B. Lewis presented a report from the trustees of the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, which was read and referred to the committee on education. Rev. C. G. Andrews, president of Centenary College of Louisiana, presented and read an interesting report of the condition and prospects of this nobie institution. Same direction. Rev. H. F. Johnson read a report from Whitworth Female College, at Brookhaven, showing this institution to be in a state of almost unprecedented prosperity—everything in good condition. S. B. Watts, on the part of the truetees of East Mississippi Female College, at Meridian, presented and read to the Conference a most gratifying report of the condition and prospects of that institution.

Bishop Paine called the names of those who were admitted into full connection, and after a very impressive address they were elected to deacon's orders.

The seventh question was taken up.—Who are the deacons of one year? D. P. Bradford, W. C. Black, J. J. Smylie, J. W. Sandell, H. W. Featherstun, D. G. W. Ellis, T. B. Walden, H. R. Singleton and Robert D. Norsworthy, passed and elected to elder's orders.

THIRD DAY.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Dec. 18, 1874.

Conference met at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop Paine in the chair. Religious exercises by Dr. L. Parker.

On motion, calling the roll was dispensed with for the remainder of the session.

Minutes of yesterday read, amended and approved.

The Conference then took up the tenth question.—What local preachers are elected and ordained deacons? Benjamin L. Spruill, Henry A. Henrickson, Archibald White, William J. Ball, Robert W. Burton, were recommended and elected.

Question 12—What local deacons are elected to elder's orders?—was taken up, and John L. Vincent elected.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

The committee to whom the cause of temperance was referred beg leave to submit the following report:

Whereas, In many places our own membership do not fully understand the requirements of our law on the subject of temperance, as laid down in our Book of Discipline; therefore,

Resolved, That the ministers and pastors of the several charges are hereby recommended to bring the subject of temperance before their congregations by reading and commenting upon the temperance clause in our Discipline, also by calling attention to the constructions of the law as set forth by our College of Bishops.

Resolved, That inasmuch as the New Testament Scriptures, by their teaching, forbid the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, we urge upon our members the great necessity of abstaining entirely from their use, believing the only safe rule to be: "Touch not, taste not, handle not."

Resolved, That we earnestly and cordially ask the co-operation of all our membership, especially the female portion, in forwarding the great and vital cause of temperance.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

IRVIN MILLER, Chm'n.
J. E. JAGERS, Sec.

Thomas B. Holloman was elected to the office of a deacon, as a traveling preacher.

The Deacon and the Devil.

Last Monday the noon heat was oppressive, and I was napping. I dreamed that I was far away in some strange land, attending some strange church, and a strange deacon walked in to lead the prayer meeting. As the people came in he began to sing:

"I am a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb,
I do not fear to own his cause,
Nor blush to speak his name."

He then read the first psalm, smiling through the first three verses, and frowning with righteous indignation through the last three. He then struck up:

"Jesus paid it all,
All the debt I owe,
And nothing, either great or small,
Remains for me to do."

But the deacon proposed to lead the congregation in prayer; a cold shudder seized me, and at the same time a strange apparition stood behind him; a dark figure, with fiendish eyes and hideous horns, stood calmly, oh! cloven hoofs. His arm was long and muscular. Great as Goliah, he was graceful and active as David. Here was the devil standing behind a praying deacon, who was unconscious of his presence. The deacon thanked the Lord for casting his lot in a goodly land, and sending him that gospel which was denied to many as good by nature as he. He prayed the Lord to "bless the truth in his own good time, wherever it is preached, and send it where it does not go." Here the devil smiled, and, laying his hand on the deacon's head, exclaimed softly: "That's right, deacon. Your Lord made you rich, that you might support a pastor here and send the gospel abroad. Now hold the money, and tell him to do his work in his own good time. He gave you the money to send the gospel to the heathen. You keep the money, and tell him to open the hearts and pockets of others to spread it from pole to pole." But the deacon continued his prayer, and asked the Lord to "bless the poor and needy." "Good again," said the devil. "Your Lord gave you lands and houses, that you might bless the poor with happy homes. Now you make your tenants do all the repairs, and on the first day of each month demand the key or the rent. And you throw your Lord's commandments into his teeth, and tell him to bless the poor himself, and make others treat them well, so that you will lose nothing by them!" Here I expected to see the deacon drive him off; but he proceeded with his prayer: "Lord, provide for the widow and the orphan—supply their many wants and cheer their sorrowing hearts." Here the devil stepped back and hissed: "Impudence! Throwing insult into your Master's face, and giving only the echo of his own orders. You have the means. He commanded you to help widows and orphans. Now you hold your money with a lion's grip, and tell him to do his own work, or else have it done by others. There is no 'sending me' in any of your prayers." Here rang the dinner-bell, and I suddenly awoke and found that what I had seen and heard was nothing but a dream.—Biblical Recorder.

SIN is never overcome by looking at it, but by looking away from it to him who bore our sins, yours and mine, on the cross. The heart is never won back to God by thinking we ought to love him, but by learning what he is—all worthy of our Observance of the Sabbath.

The practical disregard of the Sabbath on the part of very many, and sometimes even of professing Christians, is my apology for writing this plea. Sabbath observance is one of the "first principles," beyond which we should be so far advanced at the present day as that there would be no necessity for resurring to a discussion of it, as laying again "the foundation." But so long as men fail to regard even elementary principles, their defense will be an essential part of Christian teaching.

1. The observance of the Sabbath is obligatory on Christians because it is expressly commanded in God's word: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." In the beginning God sanctified the seventh day by resting upon it himself. There is no doubt it was observed during the early patriarchal times. It was observed before the constitution of the Jewish theocracy and its formal enactment in the decalogue. At the giving of the moral law at Sinai it was incorporated as one of its statutes, and its observance was rigidly enforced during the existence of the theocracy by repeated admonitions and threatenings. It was also earnestly enforced by the teaching of the prophetic dispensation. It is well known, from New Testament history, how scrupulously the Jews observed it in our Lord's time.

But is the Sabbath law binding as an institution of Christianity? This is an important question, for upon its affirmative answer depends the obligation of its religious observance at the present day. Let it be observed, then, that the answer depends upon whether Christ recognized it as such. What did he say was the object of his mission? That it was not to destroy but to fulfill the law and the prophets. The moral law must have been one essential part of that law and of the teachings of the prophets which he came to fulfill. This important element in both of these older dispensations was forcibly exemplified and sanctioned in his life and teachings. He may not have formally re enacted it, as he did some other precepts of the decalogue, but there is explicit recognition of its authority in his teachings. Because in some instances of the manner of our Savior's observance of the Sabbath we find it contradictory of the Pharisaical idea of its sanctity, is no argument that he did not regard its observance at all. This objection is fully answered by the fact that that peculiarity of the Christian dispensation—viz., mercy rather than sacrifice—which distinguishes it from all others, must be maintained, even at the expense of mere external observances. So this objection applies to the manner and not to the fact of its observance. And as further substantiation of the fact that the Savior recognized the authority of the Sabbath law, his immediate followers continued its strict observance, as related both in the inspired writings and those of the early fathers of the church. So the fact is established that God commands us in revelation to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

2. The Sabbath law is one of nature as well as of revelation. God speaks in nature as well as in revelation, only his voice is not so clear or easily interpreted in the former as in the latter. Men are not likely to read their duty as written in nature, and this is why revelation is given. But if revelation, when given, is not studied, the corroborating testimony of nature will not be appreciated. Let us see, now, how this truth is analogically supported by natural laws.

It is a conclusion very fairly reached in medical science that man requires a certain amount of repose; and that this repose is never so advantageous except in accordance with the law of periodicity. The Creator first discovers to us the prime importance of this law in the arrangement of the alternation of day and night, the former for labor and the latter for rest. And he has superadded to this by natural (as we shall soon see,) as well as by inspired testimony, another division of time—the sabbatical.

Night, as has been ascertained, is not a sufficient period of rest. Other rest than that obtained by sleep, and for a different object, is necessary to man. And the proof lies in the fact of the restorative advantage of such rest. The philosophical reasoning is based upon the known effect of the undiminished tension of the nervous system and excitement of the circulation. To obviate this, one day in seven is required for relaxation by exclusive rest, or at least a diversion from the customary labor of life. Nor is this conclusion dependent alone upon a mere abstract view of the question. The practical test has been accurately made by legislatures and boards of physicians, and the truth arrived at, moreover, has been corroborated by the testimony, based upon their personal experience, of many of the most distinguished men, and of different professions of modern times. Dr. Parre, of London, confirms this position in an elaborate testimony which he made many years ago, before a committee appointed by the British House of Commons for the purpose of investigating this question. That testimony was concurred in by many physicians in America, and in some instances by large boards of physicians, who voted unanimously in its favor. Indeed the truth here agreed upon is not without confirmation in every man's experience who is an habitual laborer, and who is disposed to give an honest verdict in reference to it. The Sabbath is a welcome day of rest to every diligent laborer who is not blind to his own true interest. It is necessary to benefit of burden, and to man, physically and mentally. It is an essential restorative. Without it the workman destroys his efficiency and shortens his life. Is not the command in nature, then, as well as in revelation: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy?"

M.

The Two Witnesses.

MR. EDITOR: St. Paul says: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."—Romans viii, 16. By the "children of God" the apostle here means God's spiritual children, that have been "born again," born of the Spirit of God.—John iii, 3-5. Now, as the children of God are his spiritual children, the two witnesses to prove to them that they are the children of God are spirits. 1. The Spirit of God itself. 2. The children of God's own spirit, or human soul. Now the great question that has baffled all the learning and human skill of worldly men to solve is: How can these things be, or how can these two witnesses prove to us that we are the children of God by spiritual adoption? I answer: I believe they do it in this way: the penitent, believing sinner is pardoned in heaven, and the Holy Spirit reveals his pardon to him by sealing it on his own soul.—Second Corinthians i, 22; Ephesians i, 13, iv, 30. And when the man's pardon is sealed on his own soul by the Holy Ghost, his soul feels it and knows it by the knowledge it has of its load of sin and condemnation being taken away, and the peace it feels with God "through our Lord Jesus Christ."—Romans v, 1.

Well, but how do these two witnesses agree in their testimony in proving "that we are the children of God?" I answer: They agree in this way: the Holy Spirit's testimony to the penitent, believing sinner is: "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee."—Matthew ix, 2; Mark ii, 5; Luke v, 18. And the testimony of the man's spirit is: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us."—Psalms ciii, 12; Isaiah xliii, 25; Micah vii, 18. Now both these witnesses agree in their testimony to prove to the converted man that his sins are all forgiven. The Spirit of God declares it, and the man's spirit feels it, knows it and enjoys it. These two witnesses agree also in their testimony to prove man's regeneration. The work of the Holy Ghost is to "create in man a clean heart, and renew in him a right spirit."—Psalms li, 10. When this work is done the witness of the Holy Spirit to the man's spirit is: Thou art "a new creature," "a new man," "a new lump," "a new-born babe."—First Corinthians v, 7; Second Corinthians v, 17; Galatians vi, 15; Ephesians ii, 15, iv, 24; Colossians iii, 10; First Peter ii, 2. And the witness of the man's spirit is: I feel and know "that old things are passed away; Behold, all things are become new."—Second Corinthians v, 17. I know that I have passed from spiritual death unto spiritual life, "because I love the brethren."—First John iii 14, ii, 10. And hence both these witnesses agree in their testimony to prove to the man that he is born of God. The Holy Spirit does the work of regeneration, and testifies to the spirit of the man that the work is done. The man's spirit also testifies to the same fact by its feeling and knowing that the work is done, and that it is "a new creature in Christ Jesus."

In the same way these two witnesses bear testimony to the child of God of his adoption into the family of God. The testimony of the Holy Spirit is: "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father."—Galatians iv, 6. The testimony of our spirit is: We feel that we "have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."—Romans viii, 15. Now it is clear that both these witnesses testify to the same fact—namely, our adoption into the family of God by crying in our hearts, Abba, Father. And as our hearts are the temples of the Holy Ghost, he fills them with all the fruit of his Spirit—"love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance."—Galatians v, 22; First Corinthians vi, 19. Now the man's spirit beareth witness with the Holy Spirit that these things are true. 1. By feeling and knowing, by the Holy Ghost given unto him, that Christ dwells in his heart "the hope of glory."—Colossians i, 27. 2. By knowing that he feels all the fruit of the Spirit itself in his own soul. He feels that he loves God supremely, and his neighbor as himself. He feels that his joy "is unspeakable and full of glory." He feels that his peace "floweth like a river." He feels peace with God, he feels peace in his own soul, and he feels peace with all men. He feels all the other fruit of the Spirit dwelling in his own soul; and "walks by faith, and not by sight." Finally, "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit to our final glorification with Christ in heaven." The apostle says: "And if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Romans viii, 17. Here the testimony of the Holy Spirit to our final glorification as children of God is: "If we suffer with him" until death, by a practical life of faithful obedience to all the commandments of Christ, we will also be glorified together with him. Now, according to this testimony of the Holy Ghost, the final glorification of the children of God with Christ in heaven depends on [illegible] practical life of godliness on earth, which the apostle calls "suffering with him." The testimony of the Christian man's own conscience is that a child of God on earth cannot be glorified with Christ in heaven unless he keeps the commandments of God by living a practical life of godliness on earth. Hence we conclude that true and undefiled religion is both experimental and practical. These are not to be separated by a gushing enthusiasm on the one hand, nor by a Christless formality on the other. True religion has life, power, knowledge, feeling, enjoyment and practical obedience to God, as these two witnesses clearly prove. Have we got it? Do we enjoy it?

Now in conclusion I ask: Is there a rational man or woman on earth who can experience all this, and not know it and feel it? I answer: I think not. For if a man is born of God he will be certain to have the Spirit of Christ in him; and if he has the Spirit of Christ in him he will be certain to feel it; and if certain to feel it, he will be certain to know he does feel it, and the time and place he first felt it. "And if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—Romans viii, 9. I recollect very well the time and place of my conversion to God, although it took place more than forty-five years ago; and I believe it to be a true gospel experience, for the three following reasons:

1. Because it agrees with the two scriptural witnesses to prove "that we are the children of God."

2. Because it agrees with all the Christian experiences recorded in the New Testament—they all knew the time and place of their conversion to God. Where their conversion is recorded, the time and place are also recorded. For instance, take St. Paul, the Philippian jailer, the eunuch, the people of Samaria, Cornelius and his family, Lydia, and the three thousand on the day of Pentecost—all these knew that they were converted, and the time and place it was done.

3. Because I cannot find one text of Scripture that supports the doctrine that holds that a man may be converted to God and not know and feel it, and also know the time and place the work was done. A kind of religion that a man cannot feel, know and enjoy is not worth one cent; no, verily, it is not worth having; it is as dead as the body of a man is without the spirit, and ought to be buried forever out of sight. I pray the Lord to deliver the Methodist Episcopal Church South from such religion as this.

If it be said that this is an extreme view of the Christian religion, and is calculated to do much harm by driving weak Christians into despair, I answer: If so, the Bible also will drive them into despair, for it is the religion of the Bible. Again, if it be said that there are many good Christians who do not know the time and place of their conversion to God, I answer: They may be good in many respects, but not in the gospel sense of a child of God. If it be said again that it is not necessary for a man to know that his sins are all forgiven, and the time and place the work was done, in order to be a child of God, I answer: These are the very things that are necessary for him to know, according to the Bible, in order to know that he is a child of God and an heir of heaven.

Prayer and Promise.

GOD'S PROMISES, AS I TAKE THEM.

Can any person with reason think that God once forgets a given promise? But how do we know he has granted our wish—that he is going to fulfill the thing asked for? Your child is ill, for example. Friends are anxiously watching with you by its side, and your silent prayer is going up to the Father's throne all the while. Soon your child begins to improve; in a little while he is well. God heard your prayer. You begged for his life, and that life is given you, and it remains to be seen whether God in his love has given you a blessing or a curse. You think I am a strange being to say that, don't you? I know you do. I have but two children on earth, and two angels waiting for me in heaven—if through God's grace I get there. Not two weeks ago these boys of mine were, both at the same time, not expected to live. We did not know which would be the first to join our family in heaven; and I now believe they are both given back to me for good on earth, if I by God's help do my duty. I believe that it is as much as it is possible for a poor sinner like me to have faith in God's promises.

But you ask: Why should I have such a delightful hope for the future of my boys? Now, don't you? I tell you I prayed while awake. The prayer was never from my heart; but I also prayed: "Not my will, oh, God, but thy will, be done." I said in my great distress: "Then, oh, God, above knowest what is before them—whether they will be men of honor or dishonor, for no one knows what temptations may befall them." This was the way I asked God for them, and my prayer was answered. Now don't you think I have reason to believe in God's promises? You know you do. And don't you take it for a promise? I may be mistaken, but I shall lock it close in my heart and call it one. Don't you think I will be right? I did not once beg for their lives, as I once heard a mother beg: "Give him to me anyhow; give him now, and I will forever be thankful." No; I knew God knew what was best for us both.

I want to tell you about what I know of God's promise to a much-beloved aunt of mine. She told it to me while on a visit at her lovely home in Texas, in the village of G. Her husband was the Rev. Mr. W., a much-beloved minister. She had only one son, the pride of their hearts and the idolized brother of several sisters. Uncle W. was the first link taken from that delightful family. Soon they took courage, for they leaned upon what God had done with fear and faith. Then their hopes were in the son and brother; and such a son! [illegible]ised, and promising so much [illegible]ness. Alas for mortal hopes! [illegible]days the flower withered, [illegible] hoary grave claimed all that was [illegible] on whom they had hoped to [illegible]. His spirit had gone to [illegible] home. At the [illegible], the only daughter of one summer was prostrated on a bed of suffering. No one who saw her thought she could recover. What did that poor, almost heart-broken mother do? She alone on her knees begged God to give her her babe. In her anguish she prayed: "Oh, God, if you will but give her to me for thirteen years, you may then take her." Don't you think this a strange request, a strange prayer? Let us see what God did. In the small hours of that night the little sufferer began to mend. Soon she was given back to life and health. When I last saw her she was ten years old, and a more lovely being I never knew. She was never like a child, but like some lovely Christian of advanced age and faith. She was loved by all. Her mother looked on her as a child of promise, always looking ahead with Christian resignation to the time when the promise should be fulfilled. As she grew older she was all that a devoted mother could wish—the idol of the household, beloved and esteemed by all her schoolmates, a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and an ornament to her profession. How her mother must have felt as she remembered God's promise. Her fourteenth birthday dawned bright and clear. She was the picture of health and loveliness. She lived on. God was good, and loaned her a few years longer, that her lamp might shine as a bright light of God's love. But in October of 1867, when Goliad was weeping, when there was mourning in every house from the dreadful epidemic, our beloved Jennie W. was called to her bright home. She left her loved ones with a song on her lips:

"My days are gliding swiftly by."

Her mother was almost heart-broken, but never complained for what God had done. She remembered his promise, and was thankful for the goodness he had shown her.

I often think of that prayer and its fulfillment. And do not tell me it was anything but the fulfillment of God's promise—she would have gone anyhow. So it may have been. But why did he take her, and let all the rest of the family live?

I have great faith in God's promise to us in answer to our prayers, and I have told you of this faith and promise with the hope that it may do some one good, as it did me.

The Bitter Lakes, Egypt.

M. Ferdinand DeLesseps has made some observations respecting the above locality, which, says Galignani's Messenger, deserve mention. Thus it appears that the engineers of Ptolemy the Second advised him not to cut a canal across the isthmus, because the land, being lower than the level of the Red sea, would be laid under water; but that prince turned the difficulty by causing flood-gates to be erected at proper points, so as to keep back the waters of the sea at high tides, and those of the canal at low ebb, so that navigation became possible both ways. Now this opening, in a perfect state of preservation at certain places, according to M. DeLesseps, as it was in the eighth century, really forms part, to the extent of four kilometers near Shaloof, of the present canal, which opens into the Red sea by means of sluices having a fall of three meters (nine feet,) being the altitude of the mouth above the average level of the sea. This proves that eleven centuries ago the latter was about the same amount higher than it is now, so that the isthmus has indeed experienced an upheaval. At the time the Hebrews quitted Egypt the rock of Shaloof, the last offshoot of the Geneffay hills, must have been entirely under water. When, by the gradual rising of the land, the top of this rock emerged from the water, it became covered with an accumulation of earthy or sandy matter brought by wind and tide, until a barrier was formed which could only be swept over at high water. The lakes were consequently precluded from experiencing any ebb or flow. The slow upheaval of the soil continuing, the terra firma of Shaloof assumed a permanent shape, and the requirements of navigation led to the idea of cutting a canal. Herodotus speaks of it as having been open in his time; this fixes its date at four hundred and fifty years B. C. It was repaired under the Ptolemies, improved during the Roman domination by a supply of water from Cairo, dredged by the Caliph Omar in the seventh century, and abandoned to decay in the eighth.

Old Mr. Twosticks has no children. He is a worrisome sort of soul, not very happy himself, and not well versed in the art and science of making other people happy.

The other day somebody remarked to little Rosie, who was complaining about how cross old Mr. Twosticks was, that the old gentleman had no children to make him happy.

"Poor gentleman!" said Rosie. "Got no children to make him happy." Then, stopping a moment to think, she added: "But I guess it's just as well, for he couldn't make them happy. I'd pity the poor children if they were his. He don't know anything about children anyhow."

A love for children is a certificate of good character, and children know to whom it ought to be given. No child loves the selfish person who says: "There, now, run away, children, and don't bother me so." No child wants to be with the snarling person who is all the time looking as if he were just going to say something snappish.—Christian at Work.

Obituaries.

MRS. FRANCES ALICE, wife of Charles Kerby, and daughter of Rev. L. M. and Mary Malinda Bethea, was born in Wilcox county, Alabama, December 10, 1852 and died in the same county and State, September 24, 1874.

Sister Kerby being born of religious parents, and brought up beneath that spiritual influence that always overshadows a well-organized religious household, was in early life made a subject of converting grace, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she lived an honored member until the day of her death. J. L. SKIPPER.

DIED, in Franklin parish, Louisiana, on the twenty-sixth of October, 1874, after a severe and protracted illness of three weeks, DAVID EDWARD RIFFLE, son of David R. and Francis Riffle, aged twenty-three years. The prop and stay of an aged father, he was the pride and hope of a kind and gentle mother. Loved by all who knew him, and respected by all who met him, he was a flower of morality, a gem of integrity, and died full of the Christian's hope, having been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for two years. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He heard the call, his soul responded, and on the potent wings of faith quickly winged its way to that "mansion of rest not made with hands, eternal in the skies." A FRIEND.

DIED—JESSE CLINTON, son of Jesse L. and Elizabeth Carruth. Jesse was born in St. Helena parish, Louisiana, on the twenty-fourth day of June, A. D. 1858, and died in the same parish, September 1, A. D., 1874, aged sixteen years, two months and seven days. He joined the Methodist Church in the fall of 1873. Jesse respected religion, and always maintained a high moral character; and, though a youth, showed the nobleness of character which would have made a noble and good man. We are not making him a model of perfection, for he had his faults, yet with all of them there was much to love and admire. He was kind to all, not resentful to any—more willing to suffer than to afflict. He was worthy of the trust reposed in him. His parents shared largely in his love and tenderness, and looked to age, if spared, to welcome them to lean on him for support.

C. C. W.

DIED, at her residence in Baker county, Alabama, on the morning of the twentieth of September, 1874, Mrs. SARAH VIRGINIA WALKER, wife of Mr. William Walker, in the forty-ninth year of her age. She was married to Mr. Walker in 1844, in Autauga county, Alabama, in which county she was born and raised. She embraced religion in 1852, in Prattville, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. From that time to her death she was in the fullest sense of the term an acceptable member of the church. In her religious life she was somewhat silent, though firm and solid. Her example in the family circle in religion, neatness, modesty and prudence, has had a very happy influence, as she leaves a very interesting family who are following in her steps: nearly all are members of the church, except the husband, although he is a substantial farmer and a worthy citizen, friendly to religion, though he has not yet embraced it. Her last sickness was long and painful, but she bore it with meekness and patience, giving ample testimony that her trust was in God. Her body was carried to church, and her funeral preached to a large, sympathizing congregation, who after service followed her remains to the silent grave. Thus has passed away a firm member of the church, a good wife and a kind mother from earth's toils, we trust, to heaven's joy. May the good Lord help the husband and children to follow in her steps.

W. H. MCDANIEL.

DIED, at his residence near Winnsboro, Franklin parish, Louisiana on the twenty-third of March, 1874, Bro. ZACHARIAH DAY. Bro. Day was born in Copiah county, Mississippi, on the twenty-sixth of November, 1825, and moved to this parish in the summer of 1844, where he remained till the day of his death.

Bro. Day united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the summer of 1854, and pretty soon thereafter was soundly and happily converted. Old things passed away and all things became new, and he lived a worthy, exemplary member of the church of his choice until he was summoned from labor to reward. Bro. Day knew God as a sin-pardoning God, and rejoiced in the knowledge and was buoyant in the hope of a home in heaven. He was not of a despondent frame of mind and spirit, but was ever hopeful. His labors in the Lord were not in vain. He endeavored to and did teach and practice personal piety and religion around his own private fireside, and with his family. Bro. Day lived to see his children, as they came to the years of accountability, unite themselves to the church, and give their souls and worship to him who doeth all things well. And now he is gone, but not forever.

Bro. Day was a worthy member of society, an exemplary member of the church, a true friend, an affectionate husband, and a kind and indulgent father. He was loved and respected by all who knew him for his uprightness and Christian integrity.

A short time before he breathed his last he was asked the condition of his mind and soul. He replied: "All well. I am ready to go and be with Jesus." A. W. MOORE.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS SIMS was born in Virginia, October 7, 1829, and died on Bayou Chene, Avoyelles parish, Louisiana, September 19, 1874, aged about forty-five years.

In early life he was brought to Williamson county, Mississippi, where he spent the larger part of his life—say thirty years. It was here also he was married, January 13, 1853, to Miss Celeie F. Paquinett, who with her eight children now mourn, most of all others, the loss of husband and father. In January, 1861, he removed with his family from Mississippi to this State. In 1862 entered the army, [illegible] close of the war, his comrades say, he made a true and valiant soldier.

With the deceased I had no acquaintance till last February, when I visited him in his sickness. I am pleased to record, however, that his neighbors testify that he [illegible] honorable man, high-minded [illegible], of fine feelings, generous [illegible]. But they also say he drank too much, and for years led an irregular course of life, and of indulgence in vices which impaired both his health and fortune. But God brought him, like so many just such prodigals are brought, by the stern discipline of his mercy, to consideration and to repentance. During his sickness (consumption) I visited him several times; and I do believe he was enabled to feel that "godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation," and to magnify the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who in his strange love came down to save him in his uttermost hour.

About the second day before he died he sent for me to come and baptize him and his wife, and receive them into the church—which had been his purpose some time. This I did; also administered the Lord's Supper. Such a scene is rarely witnessed. The Lord was with him; and now "absent from the body," we believe he is "present with the Lord." And so we hope. Thank God for such grace, such consolation and such a hope! May he be with the widow and children, and reunite them all in heaven.

W. P. OWEN.

THE following preamble and resolutions relative to the death of Bro. A. W. TUCKER were passed and adopted by the fourth Quarterly Conference at Mount Zion church, Elysian Fields circuit, Marshall district, East Texas Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, on the tenth of October, A. D. 1874:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his providence, to take from us our beloved brother, who was a faithful minister of the gospel and a member of this Conference; And whereas, The providences of God are inscrutable, often striking us at points and in places the most tender, taking from us dear friends, and from the church some of its most useful members; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we bow with submission under this affliction, yet are we deeply smitten, feeling that the church sustained a great loss; but we rejoice to believe that he was prepared for, the call that came so suddenly from the Master.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish his name, his good works of kindness and charity, associated with the spirit of generous liberality, as evidence of his devotedness to Christ, and that he was ready for the solemn test when the announcement was made: "Give an account of thy stewardship."

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his family, feeling that their loss was his eternal gain.

Resolved, That a copy of the above be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, one to his family, and one spread upon the minutes of this Quarterly Conference.

DIED, at his residence in Girard, Richland parish, Louisiana, on the sixteenth day of October, 1874, after a severe illness of swamp fever, HENRY C. LEWIS, aged thirty-six years, two months and twenty-seven days. Bro. Lewis was born in West Farmington, Ohio, August 29, 1838. He moved to Mexico, Missouri, in 1858, and there was happily married to Miss Mary E. Wells on the nineteenth of August, 1862. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church while residing in Dixon, Illinois, in 1866.

Bro. Lewis came to Richland parish on the twenty-ninth of February, 1872. Though his stay in the community has been short, yet the influence which he had for piety and holiness is, we trust, of long duration, for his life was one of great integrity. Honesty was his motto. In nothing did he ever compromise the dignity of a noble manhood. As a Christian he was one in the true sense of the word. His light shone out. It was truly a light upon a candlestick, that could not be hid but gave light to all about him.

I found much in Bro. Lewis to love and admire as a gentleman, and also as a Christian. O that our church was filled up with such men—such God-fearing and God-loving Christians. When Bro. Lewis knew the end of his earthly pilgrimage was near—when he would have to surrender his body to death—he called his wife to him to give directions relative to the future welfare of herself and children. While speaking of these she said to him: "Mr. Lewis, leave me the assurance that you are saved, and I am satisfied." His answer was: "Mary, I am sure of heaven as if I was inside the gates." O glorious thus to die! Soon he fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a devoted wife and three interesting little daughters, with many friends to mourn his death. Thus has passed from our midst a noble citizen, devoted husband and father, and better than all, a true Christian. It is sad to think we shall never more meet him in the public congregation, nor bow with him at the family altar, nor hear his voice, nor feel the hearty shake of his hand, nor behold his welcome smile and the radiant glow of his countenance. But we would not call him back, for we know he is now in that bright and better world, where no sorrow is known and where death enters not.

MY BOOKS.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Ah! well I love those books of mine,
That stand so trimly on their shelves,
With here and there a broken line,
(Fat "quartos" jostling modest "twelves,")
A curious company, I own;
The poorest ranking with their betters;
In brief—a thing almost unknown—
A pure democracy,—of letters.

A motley gathering are they;
Some fairly worth their weight in gold;
Some just too good to throw away;
Some scarcely worth the place they hold.
Yet well I love them, one and all,
These friends so meek and unobtrusive,
Who never fail to come at call,
Nor (if I scold them) turn abusive!

If I have favorites here and there,
And, like a monarch, pick and choose,
I never meet an angry stare
That this I take and that refuse;
No discords rise, my soul to vex,
Among these peaceful book-relations,
Nor envious strife of age or sex
To mar my quiet lucubrations.

And they have still another merit,
Which otherwhere one vainly seeks—
Whate'er may be an author's spirit,
He never uninvited speaks;
And should he prove a fool or clown,
Unworth the precious time you're spending,
How quickly you can "put him down,"
Or "shut him up," without offending!

Here—pleasing sight!—the touchy brood
Of critics from dissension cease;
And—stranger still!—no mortal feud,
Pedantic snarle and keep the peace.
See! side by side, all free from strife
(Save what the heavy page may smother,)
The gentle "Christians" who in life
For conscience' sake had burned each other.

I call them friends, these quiet books,
And well the title they may claim,
Who always give me cheerful looks,
(What living friend has done the same?)
And for companionship how few,
As these my cronies, ever present,
Of all the friends I ever knew
Have been so useful and so pleasant?

A Talk About Babies.

BY MRS. M. P. HANDY.

An American mother with her first baby is often an object of pity. Very rarely has her previous education fitted her in the least for the duties and responsibility which have come upon her. Even if she is the elder daughter of a large family, in all probability her mother has always shouldered the burden of household cares alone, leaving her child to "enjoy herself," and to that end allowed her as much of the delights of idleness as she has chanced to fancy.

Mrs. Gamp has immortalized the failings of monthly nurses, yet there are those who really merit the high prices they demand. Of them, however, I have naught to say. My business is with the young mother, when the nurse is gone, and she is thrown wholly on her own resources. She knows that when her baby brothers and sisters cried "mother used to give them something out of a bottle;" what that something was she has no idea. One friend suggests catnip tea, another urges fennel-seed whisky—old-fashioned people, these!—while Madame Mere, whose babies never give her any trouble, advises the soothing sirup she always uses. So the poor baby is dosed first with one thing, then another, and undergoes useless tortures.

Soothing sirups are perhaps more efficacious: they stupefy the child and silence its crying; but, alas, who shall count their victims?

"Never give a child patent mixtures," said a prominent physician to the writer. "To prescribe for a patient properly, a doctor should always know what medicines have been given, and if these have been used he has generally to go to work in the dark. If opium is necessary, use paregoric—then you know just how much you are giving."

It is safe to assert that every one of the sirups, cordials and elixirs, advertised as a boon to babies and a relief to mothers, contains opium in greater or less quantity, and more than one woman is to-day killing her child by their use, in total ignorance of what she is doing.

It is a good rule never to give physic unless you are sure that it is needed; and colic may often be relieved by external remedies. Warm flannels to the stomach, which should be gently rubbed; toasting the little feet; laying the infant across the lap, face downward, while rubbing the back with the palm of a warm, soft hand, and holding baby against the shoulder while the rubbing process is carried on in the same way; these are some of the simple modes in which a slight attack may be cured.

If medicine is needed, Dewee's Carminative, an old fogy preparation which has been in use for over forty years, is safe and reliable. The asafœtida in it is a specific for wind; the prepared chalk is a standard baby physic, and of opium there is not enough in it to be dangerous. Besides, every druggist can mix it, every physician knows its component parts; so that mothers who think that the child must take something can administer it with perfect safety. The medicine is not patented, and the good old doctor who first compounded it has gone to his grave long ago.

Babies should be bathed regularly once a day in tepid, not hot, water, and as soon as strong enough to be supported in the tub by one hand of nurse or mother, the bath should be given in that manner. It is astonishing how soon the child will learn to know its bath-tub; how soon it will begin to struggle to get to the water, and to kick and splash and play while bathing. It should always be taken out of the water on a blanket, and wiped perfectly dry by friction with a soft towel; powdered from head to foot with corn starch, with which orris-root may be mixed for perfumery; and dressed as quickly as possible.

Pins are often instruments of torture to babies, and it is not a bad idea to keep needle and thread at hand and sew the garments on, instead of pinning them, though when safety pins are used this is hardly necessary. Have the clothes ready beforehand—shirt, petticoats and little dress, all fastened together, so as to be put on all at once, and as soon as the baby is dressed feed it and let it go to sleep.

The superstition that putting long clothes on over a baby's head is unlucky is a fortunate one for the small folk whom it concerns. Nearly every baby dislikes to have its face covered for even a moment, and slipping the clothes on, feet foremost, while the baby lies on the lap, is a pleasanter process for all parties. It is a pity that fashion prescribes such very long clothes for young babies. True, it is imperative that the feet should be kept warm, but skirts three or four times as long as the wearer are scarcely necessary for this; however, fashion is positive on this point, and I have no idea of making a female Quixote of myself by fighting against fashion.

The clothes should be loose, and comfort is first to be considered in preparing them. Learned physicians—alas for those brave crusaders against so many follies!—have lectured on the inhumanity of keeping babies' arms and necks uncovered in winter weather, and have not lifted their voices in vain. Let a mother try it herself and see how she likes it! The little things get used to it just as greenhouse plants manage to stand exposure to a Northern climate: the hardy ones struggle through it, those more delicate—die! Flannel should be worn next the skin, covering chest and bowels, the year round, until the teething period is past; then, in a warm climate, it may be left off during summer. The band worn around the body of a newborn infant may, at four months old, unless the child is unusually delicate, be exchanged for a little flannel shirt, low-necked and short-sleeved, long enough to come well over the stomach. While the band is used, it must be tight enough to give the needed support without compressing the wearer, and should be looser at night than during the day. Do not depend too much, however, upon this as a support for the back; and remember that you cannot be too careful not to tax the strength of your baby's spine. Nothing is gained by encouraging a child to precocity in sitting and standing alone, or walking; and overtasking the infant spine has laid the foundation of many a weak back.

Patterns for babies' first clothes may be bought from any agency for paper patterns, and are generally sensible and reliable. The day-shirt should open behind for convenience in putting on; that worn at night, in front, like the bartow-coat or night flannel, which last should be buttoned its entire length by buttons sufficiently close together to keep out the cold.

Teeth are a mysterious dispensation, on the whole, and it might be well if they could be abolished by act of Congress, and sets provided for us all by dentists at once. Oh! the babies that die in the tedious process by which nature furnishes them. Blind humanity is ready to question Providence in thinking of it. In winter there is not so much danger, but in summer the little sufferers may be numbered by thousands. The pain cannot be avoided, yet it may be greatly lessened by judicious care and nursing. The first essential is plenty of fresh air—country air, if possible; if not, the early morning and cool evening air of the city. Shun a hot sun like a pestilence, and keep your baby cool. Let the garments be as thin and as few as possible, always keeping flannel over the bowels. Bathe twice a day and keep the nursery well ventilated. A small piece of ripe peach, English raspberries or a slice of tomato may be given with safety if the baby seem to crave them and be not ill; but the fruit must be fresh, and the quantity small. I have known cases where these have proved almost medicinal, and indeed have been used by medical advice; but no other fruit is safe.

When the gums are swollen and hot to the touch, the intolerable itching may frequently be eased by a little crushed ice beaten in a towel with a hammer, until as fine as snow, and given slowly, letting the baby suck it from the spoon. Be very cautious about administering medicines, remembering that teething infantum be suddenly checked the disease is apt to attack the brain.

The best course is to give none except under medical advice. In almost every case opium is poison to a teething child. Calomel and chalk is the allopathic remedy, almost infallible if used in time; and homœopathic specifics are not wanting; indeed Dr. Humphreys merits a handsome testimonial at the hands of the babies for what he has done to lessen the use of opium in their diseases.

If the mother can nurse her baby, let her do so by all means, for where nature provides sustenance her provision is always best. Tradition has made many a woman half starve herself by dieting for the sake of her little one, but it may be safely asserted that no wholesome food which agrees with the mother will render her milk injurious to the child. Wet nurses are dangerous experiments, when one reflects that high medical and psychological authorities agree that physical and even mental traits may be transmitted to an infant through the breast at which it nurses.

Cow's milk, fresh and pure, diluted with soft water and sweetened with loaf sugar, most closely resembles the mother's milk, and is therefore its best substitute. One part milk to two parts water are the proper proportions under six months of age; after that the quantity of milk may be gradually increased with the age of the child. If your baby is fed from a bottle, keep two always on hand, and let one soak in cold water while the other is in use. Never allow the milk to turn sour in the bottle. It is very little trouble to rinse the vessel at once, but if the milk coagulates it is no easy task to remove it. Make the tea by pouring boiling water on new milk, and then, replacing the stew-pan on the fire, let the mixture boil for a minute or two. Unless you have a nurse on whose fidelity you can rely, make your baby's tea yourself and see that it is kept sweet. A stationary washstand with the water running will, unless the weather is very warm, keep boiled milk fresh; then a little ice must be used. If the baby is unable to digest tea thus prepared, use a tablespoonful of cream to half a pint of water. If unable to procure reliable milk fresh from the cow, substitute condensed milk in its place, taking care to observe the proper proportions. Often a little lime-water added to the tea will enable the most delicate stomach to digest it.

Feed regularly, at first every two hours, increasing the interval to three and four hours, as the child grows older, during the day, and not at all during the night. Give the child a good meal at bed-time—say ten or eleven o'clock—and another when it wakes in the morning, but if it cries in the night don't feed it. A grown person getting up at one or two in the morning, and demanding oysters and coffee, would be thought delirious, and there is no more necessity for stuffing a baby all night long. Let the little one sleep at the mother's bedside in a crib, with hair mattress and hair pillow. Keep a rubber cloth over the mattress, under the sheet, and air bed and bed-clothing frequently. Much has been said for and against the rubber diaper. It is cleanly and keeps the clothing dry; nor is it unhealthy except where careless nurses make it an excuse for neglect in changing the linen underneath. Have at least two—one for night and one for day wear—and wash frequently with cold water, hanging where they may air when not in use.—Christian Union.

Concerning Colleges.

An exceedingly interesting book has been just published by Scribner, Armstrong & Co., entitled Life and Literature in the Fatherland, written by John F. Hurst, D. D., a portion of which is devoted to the schools, great and small, of Germany, and especially to an account of its universities, concerning which the volume contains many interesting and suggestive statements that are worthy of the attention of American educators, particularly of such of them as are in charge of colleges and universities.

One of these statements relates to the division of labor that is practiced in the German universities, and which, Dr. Hurst says, is carried to a marvelous extent in them. The professors, he informs us, are allowed much liberty in the choice of themes for their courses of lectures, while care is taken that no topic of importance is neglected; and he attributes the prosperity of the universities, the literary activity of the instructors, and the powerful incentives to labor which the students carry home with them, in great measure to the fact that men are invariably chosen for professorial positions with careful regard to the special departments of study in which they have manifested taste and capacity. All considerations must yield to that of the complete adaptation of the man to his topic. The professors are not compelled to conform to the notions of others in their lectures, which are therefore the direct outflow of the favorite thinking of the teacher. Much also is conceded to the individual taste of the student as well as of the teacher. To these conditions Dr. Hurst ascribes much of the traditional influence of the German university, which in this respect is, and has been for many generations, essentially a republic, regardless of the character of the government having jurisdiction over it.

But notwithstanding the reputation and influence of the German university system, and its perfection in the above particulars, Dr. Hurst says it is now undergoing serious reconsideration, the last twenty-four years having wrought such changes in it that the best educators are concerned for the future. There has recently been an alarming decline in the number of university students, fearful inroads having been made upon most of the universities by the new attention given to mechanics and natural sciences, and by the large class of polytechnical and other institutions of popular grade which have consequently been brought into successful operation. The Germans have discovered that the old methods of their universities are heavy, and they are in a painful crisis of uncertainty as to what new ones to adopt. "Singularly enough," Dr. Hurst remarks, "while some Americans are slavishly following in the footsteps of the Germans, and boast that they are reproducing here the faultless German university system, the Germans themselves are proposing to change to the English and American plan." The experience of Germany should teach those who are in charge of our colleges that if they would avert a decline in the number of their students like that which is alarming the German universities, they must act upon the idea that if the mountain will not come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain. Otherwise they will assuredly realize, earlier or later, that if the colleges fail to provide for the practical needs and to meet the practical requirements of the people, the people will provide for their own most pressing needs in their own way, as they are now doing in Germany.

The encouragement given to the establishment of the so-called agricultural, but in reality scientific and technical schools, in connection with our colleges, was a recognition by our government of the immediate needs of our countrymen, and a response to a loud and earnest demand that had made itself heard; and the sagacious educators who early offered their institutions for the furtherance of the design of bringing the higher education more closely in accord with the wants of the people exhibited great practical wisdom and foresight. These institutions may not yet fully supply these wants, for the movement is still in its infancy, but they are guiding it in the right direction. In due time they will exert a powerful refining and strengthening influence upon our people, which will be just in proportion as they come down most closely to our citizens in their various occupations, as mechanics, farmers, merchants, chemists, architects, designers, civil engineers and the like, while at the same time they maintain the standard of classical and philosophical instruction. By such means our colleges, brought more directly in sympathy with the people, and satisfying their more urgent needs, will avert the growth of those separate and antagonistical polytechnical schools which have depleted the German universities, and which threaten to withdraw absolutely from their influence the body of the practical and energetic youth of the new and mighty German empire. The American college of the future must not be content with furnishing accessions to a few professions only, but must aim to supply the nation with skilled men in all industrial and economic pursuits, and in every branch of art, literature, business and knowledge.—Christian Intelligencer.

PRICES REALIZED BY RELICS.—The passion for the possession of remarkable relics has led to extraordinary prices being sometimes given for things of little value in themselves, or sometimes perfectly worthless. The following instances of extravagant sums paid for objects more or less curious have been recorded: A tooth of Sir Isaac Newton was sold in 1816 for the sum of £730. It was purchased by a nobleman, who had it set in a ring, which he wore constantly on his finger. The prayer-book used by King Charles the First when on the scaffold was sold in London in 1835 for 100 guineas. The hat worn by Napoleon Bonaparte at the battle of Eylau was sold in Paris in 1835 for 1920 francs (about £80.) It was put up for sale at 500 francs, and there were thirty-two bidders. The ivory arm-chair presented to Gustavus Vasa by the city of Lubeck was sold in 1825 to the Swedish chamberlain, M. Schmekal, for 58,000 florins. The coat worn by Charles the Twelfth at the battle of Pultowa, and preserved by one of his officers, and attendants, was sold in 1845 for 561,000 francs. The two pens employed in signing the treaty of Amiens were sold in 1825 for £500. The pens used in Paris for signing the treaty of peace concluded after the Russian war were presented to the Empress Eugenie, by whom they have no doubt been carefully preserved. A wig that belonged to Sterne was sold at a public auction in London for 200 guineas. An old wig which had belonged to the German philosopher Kant was sold after his death for 200 francs. Voltaire's cane realized 500 francs at a sale in Paris. A waistcoat belonging to J. J. Rousseau was sold for 950 francs, and his metal watch for 500 francs. World of Wonders.

CICERO AND OLD AGE.—Nothing can be more void of foundation than to assert that old age necessarily disqualifies a man from engaging in the great affairs of the world. As well might it be affirmed that the pilot is totally useless and unengaged in the business of the ship, because, while the rest of the crew are more actively employed in their respective departments, he sits quietly at the helm and directs its motions. If in the great scenes of business an old man cannot perform a part which requires the force and energy of vigorous years, he can act, however, in a nobler and more important character. It is not by exertions of corporeal strength and activity that the momentous affairs of State are conducted; it is by cool deliberation, by prudent counsel and by that authoritative influence which ever attends on public esteem—qualifications which are usually strengthened and improved by increase of years. The truth is, if abilities of these latter kind were not the peculiar attributes of old age, our wise ancestors would not surely have distinguished the supreme council of the State by the appellation of the Senate. The Lacedemonians, for the same reason, gave to the first magistrates in their commonwealth the title of elders; and in fact they are always chosen out of that class of men.

LOCUSTS IN CHINA.—In China where locusts are wont to ravage the country, the authorities, whether civil or military, are held responsible for the stamping out of these insects as soon as their appearance has been reported. They are required to summon a large body of men, and at once surround and destroy the locusts; the expense of the maintenance of the men and compensation for the crops trodden down during the chase being supplied by the provincial treasury. Should the authorities succeed in stamping out the locusts within a limited time their services are favorably reported to the Emperor; but should they fail, and the locusts spread and do damage, they are liable to be deprived of their posts, arrested and handed over to the proper board for punishment. A certain sum per bushel is paid to the peasants bringing in unwinged locusts, and half that sum when the locusts are able to fly, while compensation is given for crops trodden down in the chase. The locusts are swept with besoms into trenches dug at the sides of the corn-field, in which a vigorous fire is kept up. The best time to capture locusts is when they are feeding at dawn of day, when, their bodies being heavy with dew and their wings wet, they are unable to jump or fly.

CHRISTIANITY refuses to be sectarian at all. How then, it may be asked, do existing divisions comport with it? They arise, under the providence of God, out of the diversity of human opinions. Only these denominations ought not to hate one another, but they ought to plant themselves on the one common ground, Christ, and recognize each other there. The one Christ can have but one doctrine and one church. But under the hands of men Christianity disintegrates into parties. From this arises the necessity of our choosing that party which seems to us the purest and most Christian. Parties were unavoidable. God suffered them that they might become instrumental in exciting Christians to greater zeal, to mutual purification, and to the exercise of kindly forbearance toward each other.—Heubner.

Religious Intelligence.

THE tyrant who rules the Zenanas in India is the mother-in-law, and she often proves to be a stone wall against the gospel efforts of Christian visitors.

THE First Presbyterian church of Louisville, Rev. S. R. Wilson, D. D., pastor, has withdrawn from the Louisville presbytery, because of the reprimand administered a short time since by the presbytery to Dr. Wilson.

REV. DR. MULLENS, the secretary of the London Society, having completed his important visitation to the Madagascar churches, left Antananarivo July 21, and reached London, via Aden, September 21, in good health.

MRS. REV. OLYMPIA BROWN WILLIS and her Universalist flock at Bridgeport, Connecticut, are not on the pleasantest terms. Some of the people think she tries to lord it over God's heritage, and she thinks equally bad things of some of them.

THE labors of Rev. Mr. Shauffler, the missionary of the American Board at Brunn, Moravia, are meeting with marked encouragement. Special interest is manifested by the children, who flock into his dwelling to receive tracts and to hear Bible stories, which are entirely new to them.

WE HAVE three of the late Wesleyan Missionary Notices before us, in which they acknowledge the receipt of above $40,000 from twenty different persons, an average of $2,000 each. There are notices also of legacies to be received, amounting to $492. Receipts from juvenile associations during the same three months are acknowledged, amounting to $191.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Evangelist writes to that journal that of the 111 Presbyterian churches erected on Manhattan Island since its first settlement only 46 are now used as places of worship. In many instances the congregations have disbanded. There are now on the island 15,494 Presbyterian communicants, showing a Presbyterian population of from 50,000 to 60,000.

THE New York Bible Society report that during the month of October 3,713 families in the city were visited, and 653 Bibles or Testaments distributed among them by gift or sale; 237 vessels lying in the harbor were supplied with 2,832 Bibles or Testaments in different languages; and 2033 Bibles or Testaments were distributed among 14,200 emigrants landed at Castle Garden.

AT A RECENT church congress held in England the Rev. Canon Ashwell said that it is "a common thing to see in a certain church paper a page of advertisements horrible and disgraceful in the last degree." As a proof he stated in one issue of the paper the following inducements were held out to purchasers: "A living where the population was scanty; a living within a four shilling and sixpenny mile of London; a living near a yachting station; a living with a rookery in the garden; a living with the incumbent nearly eighty."

THERE are 25 tribes in the Indian Territory, with a population of 70,000. Many of these people are said to be educated and wealthy, and all are trying to become civilized. Among the Creeks, who number about 15,000, there are 3 missions, 2,050 members, 404 Sunday school scholars, and $14,258 is spent yearly for educational purposes. The Cherokees, of whom there are 17,000, have 2,000 pupils in their schools; 2,000 of the tribe are church members. The Choctaws have 50 day schools. Their chief, Ross, is a graduate of Princeton College.

BARNABAS ROOT, a native African who was brought to this country by the American Missionary Association, and educated at Galesburg and Chicago, was ordained as a missionary, a few weeks ago, at the Broadway Tabernacle church. The sermon was preached by Dr. Taylor from the appropriate text in Mark v, 19: "Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee." Mr. Root, who is a man of fine intellect and good scholarship, is to return to his own country, and will labor under the auspices of the American Missionary Association in the Mendi mission.

AT THE recent meeting of the English Wesleyan Missionary Society the following interesting facts were given in regard to China missions: The first mission was started by the London Missionary Society in 1807. Thirty societies are now engaged in China, of which 11 are American and 4 German. There are 196 foreign missionaries, 28 native ministers, 648 native agents and 10,000 church members. The missions which are on or near the seaboard extend from Kalgan, in Manchuria, on the northern frontier, to Canton, in the south. The chief Wesleyan inland mission is at Hankow. Nine inland provinces, containing a population of 180,000,000, have no Protestant missionaries.

THE September number of the Free Church Record gives much of its space to revival intelligence. The interest at Lovedale, South Africa, continues. Various denominations have united in the work. In the course of three weeks of special services on every evening a large number of young people, chiefly connected with the Lovedale Institution, have accepted Christ. In Calcutta the revival continues, and united services in the Bengali language have been instituted. At Madras, where there has been much spiritual deadness among professed Christians, Mrs. Taylor's labors have resulted in about 300 conversions. The old-fashioned Methodist protracted meeting has gathered in crowds, night after night, from six to ten o'clock.

AT THE late Wesleyan Conference, Camborne, England, Rev. W. Dare, who some time since visited the Fiji Islands, said: "I was taking tea with the Wesleyan missionary and his wife in the lone island of Kandavu, in the midst of 10,000 of these Fijians. As we were at tea the bell rang. The missionary said: 'That is the signal for family worship. Now listen; you will hear the drums beat,' and immediately they began to echo to each other round the shores of that southern sea. 'There are 10,000 people on this island,' said he, 'and I do not know of a single house in which there will not now be family prayer.'" Forty years ago the Fiji Islanders were cannibals; now the Wesleyans have 25,000 members meeting in class, 2,000 day schools, 900 catechumens, 2,000 Sunday schools, with 53,000 scholars, 53 native assistant missionaries, 1,000 local preachers, while upward of 100,000 persons sit under their ministry.

A MEETING in connection with the University of the South was held in October in the Church of the Transfiguration, Fifth avenue and Twenty-ninth street, New York. When the war came the University lost all its property except its land on the summit of Cumberland mountain. Nevertheless, after the war, in September of 1868, a beginning was made with nine students and three instructors. Now it numbers 250 students and 18 professors. It is the church school of the Southern dioceses, and has never received any aid of any consequence from the North. Its chief need now is a permanent endowment fund for the erection of buildings, the foundation of professorships, and like purposes. Bishop Potter, Bishop Quintard, of Tennessee, Bishop Littlejohn, Dr. John Cotton Smith and other clergymen delivered addresses, and a committee of clergy and laity was appointed to present the claims of the University to the church at large.

WHILE we expect, says the Independent, to give a review of the year's work of the American Board when we shall have received the annual report, a few notes drawn from the "General Survey," already published, will be of interest to our readers. Upon the whole, the work has made more than the average advance during the last year. There are 26 more churches, and about 1,000 communicants have been added to the rolls. The foreign missionary force has received a net increase of 24, so that the missions are in better working order than for many years. Drawbacks have been the fearful famine in Asia Minor, the murder of Mr. Stephens in Mexico and the temporary check of the work there through Romish intimidation, the intrusion of High Church Episcopalians into the Mahratta field, the attempt to hinder the circulation of the Scriptures in Turkish, and to prevent Mohammedans from becoming Christians, and the financial embarrassment at home. The centers of special interest have been the Japan mission, where two churches have been organized. The one at Kobe, with 15 members, supports preaching at 9 places outside of the city, and 7 of its 9 male members are preparing to become preachers. Seven hospitals, under the supervision of Dr. Berry, have been supported by the natives. The Micronesian mission, where remarkable success has attended the gospel on Ponape and Pinelap. The missions to Romish countries show only preparatory results. The venerable Dr. Shauffler gives a very encouraging report of prospects in Moravia and Bohemia. To the work of education the board has given the labors of 25 ordained missionaries, 60 women and several missionary wives, and about $90,000 a year. The supply of Christian literature has cost, in addition to the grants of the Bible and Tract Societies, $20,376. The medical work and the labors of women among women are developing to a gratifying extent. Of the 106 native pastors one-half are entirely supported by their congregations and the rest partially. These contributions have largely stimulated the activity of the native church. Through the agency of the board the gospel is being preached in 21 different languages.

THE London Missionary Chronicle gives an account of Rev. Mr. Murray's visit to the station of the New Guinea mission in the early spring of the present year. Sailing from Cape York, Australia, the point from which Mr. Murray superintends the labors of the Polynesian teachers, he first called at Port Moresby, on the New Guinea mainland, where four teachers and their wives had been left at the previous visit. Mr. Murray found the teachers in good health and kindly treated by the natives. The services were held in the cocoanut groves of the two villages at Port Moresby. They were well attended, and the word was received with deep interest. The story of Christ's death, and especially of his resurrection, impressed a people who mourn with unusual affection over their departed children. Their religious views are vague and childish. They believe that two of their chiefs made the earth, sky, sea and man. They suppose that the souls of the dead pass to a land beyond their farthest cape, and in course of time return and inhabit other human bodies. The first white men they saw appeared to them to emerge from the sky, and again to pass into it, as they know of no other country except their own. Polygamy is not practiced among them, and infanticide and cannibalism are unknown. While the women have the heaviest work to perform, they show more independence than is the case with their less favored sisters among the dark races. Mr. Murray received favorable accounts of villages fifty miles inland, some of whose people had visited the coast recently and had requested teachers. A new station was opened at Hanuabada, on the coast, fifteen miles west of Port Moresby. On his return the superintendent visited the five inland stations. He found the teachers all doing well. They could report no decided conversions as yet; but the population of the islands are attentive to the gospel, observe the Sabbath, clothe themselves decently, and show their teachers many evidences of affection. The Lesson Leaf is eagerly studied, and its mysteries imparted by the more to the less advanced. Now that the re-enforcements from Europe have arrived and the little steamer Ellengowan has reached Cape York this very hopeful work among a hitherto unknown people will be carried on with increasing energy.

CHANGE OF RATES.

In conformity with an agreement between the several papers published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the subscription price of the Advocate, including postage, will hereafter be as follows, viz:

One year	$2 50
Six months	1 50
Three months	80

The Subscription Price of the Advocate has been One Dollar Per Year to ministers of the gospel, and the same to the widows of deceased itinerant preachers. Where bills have been sent charging them more than that amount it was owing to the fact that they were not known as such to the book-keepers, and if they will inform us the accounts will be corrected. Should they have already paid we will credit the amount overpaid on subscription, or dispose of it as they may order.

Look Out for Acknowledgments.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

RATES.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate will be furnished to subscribers hereafter at the following rates, including postage:

One Year	$2 50
Six Months	1 50
Three Months	80

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

to all Ministers of the Gospel, traveling or local, and widows of deceased traveling preachers.

FREE ONE YEAR

to any person forwarding to us four new yearly subscribers, with Ten Dollars.

Christmas.

It is impossible for mortal man now to tell the exact date of the Savior's birth. We believe that it has been assigned by differing authorities to almost every day in the year. The probabilities are greatly against the conjecture that it took place in the winter. As every one has an equal right to his opinion about the matter, we would, for ourselves, fix it some time in the spring, when the air of Palestine is most balmy, and when the verdure is most fragrant and luxurious. It was meet that he who came to give life to the world, and to freshen and beautify the earth, should be born amidst opening flowers, and the upspringing and resurrection of the withered and dead herbage. It was a season when the birds sang, as well as the angels, and when the world of nature was in completest accord with the coming of the Sun of righteousness. As to the year, which we are told was fixed by the abbot Dionysius Exignus in the sixth century, there seems to be good ground for the assertion that the common era is more than four years too late. The venerable Bede first used it in historical works some time in the eighth century, and we suppose this Anno Domini will be continued until the Lord "shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God."

It matters little, however, about the day or the exact year. About eighteen hundred and seventy-four years ago Christ, the Lord, was born. There is no dispute about the fact, though there has been abundant controversy concerning the nature of this wonderful child. Our Christian readers, and the Christian world in general, are content to take the history as it stands in the gospels, and to follow the simple shepherds, as the first visitors and worshipers, to the manger where the child Jesus was. They can, with them, hear the angel and the multitude of the heavenly host, as the strains of praise, seemingly falling from the stars in showers of surpassing sweetness and melody, vibrate through the still night air: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." They will also be in full sympathy with the learned and devout Magi who came from far-off Persia, moved to seek this promised King of the Jew, by the appearance of his star.

A long, long journey it was—a thousand miles at least. They may have been acquainted with Balaam's sublime prediction: "I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh; there shall come a star out of Jacob, and a scepter shall rise out of Israel." They had sufficient reasons for starting, they saw the star when they reached Babylon—"his star in the east"—and then, after crossing the broad regions stretching to Jerusalem, the same marvelous luminary appears again—"the star which they saw in the east" goes before them, "till it came and stood over where the young child was." After the tedious and toilsome travel, occupying months of time, we can well believe "when they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." Divinely guided, they found the child. How the scene impressed them we are left to imagine only in part. "And when they were come into the house they saw the young child with Mary, his mother, and fell down and worshiped him; and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts—gold and frankincense and myrrh." They worshiped him, not them; they presented unto him gifts, not unto them. The child was perhaps in Mary's arms, and both were in the picture, as their eyes fell upon it, even as Raphael painted it—Mary and Jesus, the young and blessed mother, and the infant Savior. The worship and the gifts might have been equivocal, as embracing both, but the distinction is clear and sharp. Here, if anywhere, and by these Gentile star-gazers, we might look for the worship of the mother along with the child. Wisely and carefully guarded is this act of homage. There is no shadow of mariolatry here. The wise men from "the far east" were better taught of God. It is perhaps well to think of this, even on Christmas day, in connection with the papal dogma of the immaculate conception, and the worship which papists bestow upon the mother of Jesus. If we follow the example of the wise men we shall at least be kept from the sin of idolatry.

The time, however astray in its chronology, calls our attention to these circumstances of the nativity, the lowly manger, the humble surroundings of the kingly child. It was so ordered of God, and the poor of this world, and those who are straitened in their fortunes—sorrowing, anxious mothers, and infants born to the hard heritage of poverty—have a peculiar and comforting proprietorship in this wonderful birth. The joyous beams pour their fullest warmth and light into the homes of the poor, and the splendors of the advent fall with richest effulgence upon the lot of indigence and misfortune. "For, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people." If we will have it as an anniversary, let it be a universal jubilee. Let all be glad on this Christmas festival. Let the poor and the rich rejoice in the common salvation. Let the children sing, and be made happier on this than on all other days. And let it be the care and charge of those who have the means to minister to the destitute and afflicted.

The very name of the day should check frivolity and dissipation, and repress all tendency to profane and sensual indulgence. It is not a day of obligation, but, if observed at all, it should have a decidedly religious recognition. Shame it is to the professed followers of Christ if they run to excess of riot, and bring reproach upon the church by sinful pleasures and diversions. It is a hideous and monstrous perversion to indulge in the revelings of wine and dance, as if the day gave a dispensation from the ordinary restraints of temperance and sobriety. In the season, so strangely given up to worldly pleasures, it behooves the friends of Christ to be more than ever careful to keep themselves "blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke."

Alabama Conference.

The missionary anniversary of the Alabama Conference was held on Saturday night, as usual. The Methodist and Baptist churches were both filled. Prof. Price, of Huntsville, and Dr. McFerrin delivered addresses at the Methodist church, and Bishop Doggett and Rev. S. P. Richardson at the Baptist church, the collections in both churches amounting in all to about $500. The collections for missions this year will hardly exceed $1,500. This is, we believe, considerably more than last year.

On Sunday the pulpits of the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian churches had three sermons each, and good congregations attending. The great congregation was, of course, at the Methodist church at eleven o'clock, where Bishop Doggett preached. We could not hear it, but we heard of it. The people of Opelika go to church. For a place of its size it is an example in this respect.

We regretted the necessity of leaving Opelika before the adjournment, but we carried away with us the pleasantest recollections of this noble Conference. They have a fine field, somewhat depressed just now and impoverished, but with abundant promise for the future; and they have a grand body of young and middle-aged men to cultivate it. The field is indeed white to harvest, and the laborers are able and abundant. May they have a rich return this year—the new Conference year.

Mississippi Conference.

Leaving Opelika on Monday morning some time before daylight, we reached Hazlehurst on Tuesday evening at sundown, and are soon at home under the hospitable roof of Dr. G. W. Purnell. The doctor and wife, and Mrs. Purnell's mother, Mrs. Selby, were old New Orleans friends, and we were right glad to gather up and brighten the links in the memories of other years.

Wednesday morning, December 16, opens gloomily with a cold rain, but the Bishop and a large number of the preachers and laymen are in their places. The sessions are held in the courthouse—a spacious and comfortable room, well warmed, and conveniently supplied with desks, and with committee-rooms at hand.

Bishop Paine appears in excellent health, and goes through the labors of the chair and cabinet with no sign of weariness. He presides admirably, and, as he stands before us addressing the class to be received into full connection, he impresses us as one of the finest embodiments Christian dignity and manhood that we have ever looked upon. He seems at least ten years younger than he is, and the twenty years or more that have passed since we first saw him in Conference have dealt very kindly with him. May a good Providence spare him to the church for many years.

The preachers are generally well, and have been fed and clothed surprisingly well, considering the straitness of the times. We believe that none have died during the year. Revivals have prevailed throughout the Conference, and the statistics will probably show a large increase in the membership. In the passage of character every man is required to read the complete statistics of his charge before he retires, with the privilege of explaining any apparent deficiencies—a very fair way of exhibiting what has been done, and affording such light as the Bishop and presiding elders know well how to improve and apply. Judging from these reports, as we catch them on the wing, the preachers have generally done faithful work, and have accomplished much this year. Hard work and moderate compensation financially is the reflection which continually comes to mind. Who will ever know the labor and sacrifices of these devoted men, and the faith and patience with which they have toiled to spread the gospel throughout this land? "Though poor, yet making many rich." God will reward them in that day.

The committee on temperance presented an excellent report in the main, and which, after some modifications and a lively but brief discussion, was adopted. The Conference has resolved to preach on the subject and to mind the old rule; the traffic is also condemned in strong terms. As the business proceeds we observe that there is carefulness about the admittance and continuance of non-effective men. The Conference fund, which goes to the support of the widows, orphans and worn-out preachers, is thus guarded. Every man's Conference relation ultimately tends in this direction, and justice to the old and effective laborers demands vigilance. The people must be assured that the money collected reaches only those who by their faithful services are entitled to it. The candidates for admission on trial at this writing have not yet been announced, but we are informed that a large and promising class of from twelve to fifteen have come up. The vote on the new rule on temperance was: Yeas, 30; nays, 75.

The Ministerial Educational Association held its annual meeting on Friday night. The audience was large, and was addressed by W. L. Nugent, Esq., Rev. H. F. Johnson and Rev. Benjamin Jones. Twelve hundred dollars was subscribed. The object of the association is to aid in the education of young men who are preparing for the ministry. The association is doing good, and meets with much encouragement. The roll of superannuates was before the Conference on Saturday morning. Among them are the names of Andrew Day, for forty years in the work; John G. Jones, who enters upon his fiftieth year in the ministry, and whose character was passed by a rising vote; Thomas Clinton, who was in the fluorant saddle, and a cotemporary of Bishop Paine in 1819; Barnabas Pipkin, in Mississippi since 1816.

The venerable J. G. Jones addressed the Conference at some length. He was seventy years old in August last, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1821, was converted in 1822, admitted into the traveling connection, on trial, December 24, 1824, and has been in the Mississippi Conference since that time. He always wanted a big work. Methodism has advanced—better now than in his early ministry, more and more prosperous, and the Conference of to-day looked better than it ever did. He was one of the happiest old men in the world—now on the verge of life, looking forward to his change, and more than ever persuaded of the soundness of Methodist doctrines. After the Conference had sung

"Together let us sweetly live,"

Bishop Paine followed with some impressive observations, exhorting the preachers to follow in the footsteps of the fathers, to be faithful to the Methodism which they had received in trust, and to hand down the heritage unimpaired to posterity. By resolution Bro. Jones was requested to deliver a semi-centennial sermon before the Conference at its next session.

The report of the committee on the state of the church, presented and read by W. L. C. Hunnicutt, was a fine document, exhibiting healthy growth in the church—over twenty thousand members, the ministry better supported, larger collections for missions, and more Sunday schools than last year. After the reading of the report the Conference rose and sung the doxology,

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,"

We learn that about $1,750 have been collected for missions this year, which pays about eighty-six per cent. on the appropriations.

We left Hazlehurst on Monday evening, December 21. The weather being inclement on Saturday night, the missionary anniversary was held on Sunday night. Colonel William L. Nugent, Rev. W. E. M. Linfield and Rev. Harvey Johnson delivered addresses. The collection amounted to $155.25. On Sunday morning at eleven A. M. there was preaching by members of the Conference in the Baptist and Presbyterian churches. Bishop Paine delivered a most delightful and instructive sermon, full of unction and power, at the Methodist church, to a house literally full and overflowing, after which the following deacons were ordained: John W. Ellison, James W. McLaurin, Thomas Bascom Holloman, traveling; Henry A. Henrickson, Archibald White, William J. Ball, Robert W. Burton, William Nailor, colored, local.

After the three o'clock sermon the following elders were ordained: Robert D. Norsworthy, Daniel G. W. Ellis, Thomas B. Walden, Hiram R. Singleton, traveling; William Hoover, John L. Vinson, local. The session of Monday morning was taken up with the completion of the twentieth question, and the reception of reports. Two venerable and respected members of the Conference, James Shanks and Joseph Nicholson, for the first time in their long career, passed from the effective list, and were granted a superannuated relation. Much to the regret of the whole Conference, Rev. G. W. Chatfield was constrained to ask for a location. The finance committee, through its able chairman, Colonel W. L. Nugent, made a clear and capital report. Collected for Bishops, $1,317.15, being $437 more than the apportionment. For widows, orphans and superannuates, collected, $1,950, leaving a considerable deficiency on their claims. $2,60 is the amount estimated to meet the claims on this fund for the ensuing year. The next Conference is to meet at Canton, Mississippi. To Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, Dr. Benjamin H. Catching and their assistants, the Conference is much indebted for complete arrangements, and for an abundant and hospitable entertainment.

Hazlehurst is a pleasant and rather prosperous town of fifteen hundred inhabitants, on the railroad, forty miles below Jackson, Mississippi. It has grown up pretty much since the war, and is still growing. The Conference is being well entertained, and its daily sessions are largely attended.

Death of Rev. Jefferson Hamilton, D. D.

We called on Dr. Hamilton at his room in Opelika on Saturday, the twelfth, and found him apparently improving. On Sunday we learned that he was no worse. Leaving for Hazlehurst, Mississippi, the seat of the Mississippi Conference, on Monday before day, we heard nothing further until the news of his death reached us on Thursday last. Up to the time of going to press we have no information beyond what is contained in the following from the Opelika Times of December 17. It will be seen that his death occurred on Wednesday, the sixteenth.

It becomes our painful duty to announce the death of Rev. Jefferson Hamilton, of Mobile, which occurred in this city yesterday about one o'clock.

His death was not unexpected, for he had been dangerously ill for several days since his arrival in attendance upon the Alabama Conference.

It is a somewhat remarkable coincidence that his death should occur at the same time of the announcement of his appointment for continued service in the church in which he has so long and faithfully served, and which he has adorned with every Christian virtue for the last thirty years.

But his labors are at an end, and he has gone to reap the reward of the just and faithful, in that land where sorrow is unknown. From earthly care and trouble, which is the lot of all, he is translated to the region of eternal bliss, to enjoy, without ceasing, the fruits of a life well spent in the service of his Master.

The hearts of his co-laborers are awakened in deepest sympathy over this afflicting calamity, and the church and country will mourn the loss of this truly good and Christian man.

From Mexico.

City of Mexico, Nov. 16, 1871.

Mr. Editor: It was only by the last American mails, twenty days ago, that I received, through the Nashville Advocate, a notice of the times and places of the Conference sessions. When Bishop Keener was absent in September and October, I had not the satisfaction of knowing where he was, and so my spirit visitations hovered on tired wings over a region of probabilities. Although the General Conference Daily was mailed to me regularly by our dear Bishop himself, I received only nine of the twenty-three or four copies. So I remain in blissful (?) ignorance of much that was done. I mention these things that you may appreciate one of our great deprivations in Mexico. The non-reception of the church papers has been a trial. But in the midst of deprivations there is always relief in the consciousness of duty done. We are ever disposed to imagine ourselves worse off than others, to magnify our little trials, and lose sight of the fact that the only true life is a life of sacrifice, in one form or another. Still, not to wander too far from the text, the Advocate forms a living link in our Methodism. How much of life there is in it can be known only by those who are deprived of it. Thanks to the continued efforts of Bishop Keener, the friend par excellence of Mexico and her missionaries, the future promises better things. By the mail referred to I received one copy of the Nashville, and a package, running through September, of the New Orleans Advocate. A few days subsequently the Hon. J. W. Foster, United States minister, sent me several numbers of the Nashville, one as late as the tenth of October. So you see I am now only about one month behind times. The wonderful records of thirty days or more are to come, but think how we will enjoy the feast! Hunger gives a good and honest appetite.

I leave you to imagine with what almost childish eagerness I devoured my papers—the New Orleans especially. First there was a hurried, impatient glance through each copy, without respect to dates. This was followed by a less rapid "going through," more in their order. Then a third more deliberate, home-like reading of everything in its place. And fourthly, a rereading of all, even the Child's Corner, for I felt almost a very child in my gladness. What a sweet, peaceful face these papers had for me! How I weighed their words and treasured their counsels!

Rejoice with us that we have a line of steamers direct to New Orleans. The Alexandres, of New York, have put on, I am told, splendid boats. Including the stoppings at Tampico and Tuxpan, the passage is five days; fare, $50 gold. By this arrangement we do not get mails any oftener, but in seven days from New Orleans, five to Vera Cruz, and two to Mexico. The traveler to Mexico, in addition to the pleasure of a visit to Tuxpan and Tampico, is saved a long sea voyage and disagreeable call at Havana. There is now no necessity for the annoyance and expense of a passport. I almost fear our fortune is too good to last. Will not your merchants make a combined effort for the Mexican trade? It is immensely valuable, and will increase every day. Every class of New Orleans business is interested in keeping up this line. If a want of enterprise permits this opportunity to go unimproved, it will not return soon.

I feel that I was particularly fortunate in getting the September numbers of the Advocate, containing, as they do, such gracious accounts of still more gracious revivals. Dr. Haygood and other brethren had in their letters partially prepared me for the good news. But, behold, the half had not been told. You cannot conceive how those figures of one week's conversions, copied by you from the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, have grown and magnified under my fixed gaze. Three thousand souls born in one week! What a grand work! Who can estimate the results of that week's labor? What throbs of joy for angel hearts! What strains of praise for heaven's courts!

Do you suppose you had a single reader to whom those figures brought more real comfort? I trow not. I claim a high premium on my enjoyment of such things. Remember that I have not heard a revival song, sermon or the glad shout of a new-born soul for nearly one year. Those mighty circles and wonderful eddies of religious intercourse have not been for me. Imagine yourself thus shut up, supplies cut off, and allow me my premium.

Yet great as those figures are—pregnant with the mightiest results—might they not have been greater? Did each preacher, did each member, do his or her duty? This question will come to us all in the great day. Seeing then the value of a soul by the joys of life and the sorrows of death, its significance will be appreciated. May our God help us. "The night cometh."

I am not complaining, my dear brother, that so little, but rejoicing that so much has been done. How you had such a revival spirit since the war? I think not.

Another question: Has the church in this time, ever been so moved in the direction of foreign missions in the past year? All can and answer, with emphasis: No. That so little has been accomplished yet—though we are so far benefited both privilege and obligation—there is a perceptible movement along the lines. While we yet speak he answers. One can easily connect cause and effect. The promise is to the man, to the people, who obey his commandments. If we are to believe God's word, a missionary spirit is the absolute prerequisite to the life of the church. It is one of the vital chords connecting us with his beneficiation. The apostles were not to remain in Jerusalem until all of their own people were converted, but to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." The reflex influence of their missionary work was much greater than its direct effort. So to the church a dual blessing awaits missionary zeal. Without it a church may have a name to live, but The name is all. It will in fact be dead.

I see a growing missionary spirit in the wonderful revivals prevailing. Besides, I have before me occular demonstration in the great work inaugurated in Mexico. In addition I have private letters, coming by every mail, full of such assurances—full of the warmest sympathy. Just now especially do I think of a most comforting, brotherly letter by the last packet from Dr. Haygood. He has no idea what a work he did in that letter. Please tell him so. Puede procurara otro rez. In connection with the good people of Oxford, Georgia, and the board of Emory College the doctor did a good work for Mexico. In behalf of Mexico I return thanks. In the same matter we have encouraging responses from Centenary, through Dr. Andrews, Greensboro, through Dr. Hamilton, and Bro. Brown, of Woodville, Mississippi, previously reported. We have provision made for six young men who will finish their education in English and Methodism in the midst, returning to us, we hope, to pray, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, to do a mighty work for their own people in the years to come. The outlook is indeed promising.

Perhaps from a lack of faith it does not appear to be the time when a "nation shall be born in a day." It seems that our policy is to go slowly. We cannot keep pace with our desires. The tired feet lag behind the wish of the soul. We must work on, steadily, persistently, work on—sow with a diligent hand and wait patiently for the harvest. Nature gives us a valuable lesson in this direction. If we are only faithful to our trusts God will take care of the results.

As I have already said, the outlook is promising. The way is still opening. The door has stood wide open for years. Only as the light increases we see it the more plainly. Opportunities for the purchase of property and the organization of congregations and schools are increasing daily. The work lies among the poorer classes, who are unable to help themselves or us in moneyed contributions. The numbers brought under instruction can be measured only by missionary contributions. What can be done with our present appropriation. The demands of the field, however, are far, far beyond it. It is painful to see the hungry and naked around you with no means to feed or clothe.

We will trust in our God, and live to see an empire won to Christ.

The fact that Protestantism has open sympathy and patronage from the humble classes has been frequently mentioned. The higher classes, if not real or nominal Catholics, are nothing religiously. I am persuaded that these last-named are largely in the majority. Some few attend Protestant service, and a few of the men go to Catholic worship. There is no question but that there are many who would gladly see Protestantism succeed. They understand the value of religious liberty. They need not be told that with the success of evangelical Christianity will be inaugurated an era of progress and prosperity. But to the present we find none willing to risk fortune, reputation or business by an open, practical avowal of their sentiments. There are many foreigners in the city who, though thorough Protestants, yet for the reason above given stand aloof. An intelligent, excellent business man said to me not long since: "My great desire is to get my family away—home—that I may educate my children. I dare not permit them to attend a Protestant school, nor dare I attend Protestant worship. I have necessary business relations with Catholics, and for me to be seen visiting your church would be to break me up." Of course I could not sympathize with such a view or with such practice. I have replied "that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

It is hard to make such a report from Mexico. The spiritual atmosphere, like the natural, is rare and pure. This was not the first time I had listened to this story. It is a well-accepted fact here. Protestantism is as yet a poor and feeble thing in Mexico. So it was in the days of our Savior, when unlearned fishermen were the preachers, and the hungry and ragged multitudes were followers. We look for better things. Will the church be true to her trust?

Joel T. Da

Died, at the residence of his son, Rev. John Wilkinson, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, on Wednesday, the 13th instant, Mrs. Mary Wilkinson, in the eighty-three years.

For some reason the sixth day's proceedings of the Alabama Conference have not come to hand.

Truth is truth, though all forsake it—it still remains the same, and its own excellency recommend it, even though the conduct of its professors does not.

A GRECIAN LEGEND.—When Bacchus was a boy, he journeyed through Hellas to go to Naxia; as the way was very long, he grew tired, and sat down upon a stone to rest. As he sat there, with his eyes upon the ground, he saw a little plant spring up between his feet, and was so much pleased with it that he determined to take it with him and plant it in Naxia. He took it up and carried it away with him; but, as the sun was very hot, he feared it might wither before he reached his destination. He found a bird's skeleton, into which he thrust it, and went on. But in his hand the plant sprouted so fast that it started out of the bones above and below. This gave him fresh fear of its withering, and he cast about for a remedy. He found a lion's bone which was thicker than the bird's skeleton, and he stuck the skeleton, with the plant in it, into the bone of the lion. Ere long, however, the plant grew out of the lion's bone likewise. Then he found the bone of an ass, larger still than that of the lion; so he put the lion's, containing the bird's skeleton and the plant, into the ass' bone, and thus he made his way to Naxia. When about to set the plant he found that the roots had intwined themselves around the bird's skeleton, and the lion's bone and the ass' bone; and as he could not take it out without damaging the roots, he planted it as it was, and it came up speedily, and bore, to his great joy, the most delicious grapes, from which he made the first wine, and gave it to men to drink. But behold a miracle! When men first drank of it they sang like birds; next, after drinking a little more, they became vigorous and gallant like lion's; but when they drank more still they began to behave like asses.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.—At a late Sabbath school convention in Connecticut Rev. Henry Clay Trumbull, in reply to various questions that were asked, urged that there be but one regular preaching service on the Sabbath, and also gave in substance the following practical answers:

A Sabbath school should not be held immediately after the morning sermon. These two services, coming so close to each other, would overlap and crowd out each other. The Sabbath school ought to be the Bible school for the whole church, and as such is worthy of a distinct and separate service, and should not be a mere addition to some other service. There is great need of quiet rest and refreshment after the morning service, so that Sunday school teachers and scholars can come fresh to the study of the Bible. There ought not to be held any other service at the hour of the Sabbath school. The whole strength of the church is needed just as much in the study of the Bible at Sabbath school as in the preaching service. Any other plan than this divorces the children from the parents in the work and benefits of the church.

A COAL DEALER in Portland, Maine, recently sued a delinquent customer for a balance due for coal delivered. The defendant proved that the coal was weighed by one of the employes of the dealer, and not by a sworn weigher of coal. The Superior Court of the State thereupon ruled that plaintiff could not recover, as the Maine statutes provide that the seller shall not maintain a suit for the price of coal unless he had caused the same to be weighed by a sworn weigher and delivered a certificate of the weight to the buyer before beginning suit.

OUTWARD prosperity cannot create inward tranquillity.

Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

ATTORNEY AT LAW.—A. L. Tucker, late of the parish of St. Mary, Louisiana, has settled in our city to practice his profession. His office is at 160 Common street. Mr. Tucker, with whom we have had the pleasure of an acquaintance for many years, is one of the ablest lawyers in the country, and a worthy and estimable citizen. Those who have use for an attorney, or seek legal advice, are assured that he is capable and attentive to business. See card in our advertising columns.

ROBERT E. LEE HAT STORE.—H. Larroussini, dealer in hats, and everything pertaining to his line of business, has chosen a most popular trade mark, but we believe that his goods will not throw any discredit upon the name. Call at the corner of Royal and St. Louis street if you wish to see a well-arranged and completely-assorted store.

GROCERIES, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.—See advertisement of John McMains, Esq. who keeps up two large establishments for the convenience of his customers in the neighborhoods in which they are located, viz.: 372 and 374 Magazine street, opposite the Magazine market, and 40 Washington street.

MATTRESSES, HAIR, FEATHER AND MOSS.—The attention of families, steamboat owners, hotel-keepers, and all in need of mattresses made of moss, feathers or hair, is directed to the advertisement of T. R. Honor, No 230 Magazine street, in another column.

CHINA, EARTHEN AND GLASSWARE.—See advertisement of Francis Lauer, importer and dealer in the above-named articles, together with a large assortment of house-furnishing goods and useful articles. Call at 616 Magazine street and examine his stock.

FANCY AND STAPLE GROCERIES.—Michael Hackett, dealer in fancy and staple groceries, corner of Dryades and Thalia streets, calls attention, through our advertising columns, to his fresh and well-assorted stock. See advertisement and give him a call.

IN OUR COLUMNS of to-day will be found the advertisement of H. Fehsenfeld, No. 104 Canal street, dealer in millinery and fancy goods of every description. Mr. Fehsenfeld will give special attention to country orders.

THOSE who have not called at Messrs. Levy Bros., 540 Magazine street, can form no just idea of the extent and variety of their stock of dry goods. See their advertisement.

DR. WARRINGTON'S REMEDIES.—See his advertisement in another column.

DR. HUNTER

OF

The Lungs and Air Passages.

Theories in medicine, as in mechanics, are of little value until put into practice and found to be successful. But success cannot result from a false theory. It is therefore essential that our theories should be correct, and in strict accordance with scientific data.

Nature, which is only another name for scientific principles, should guide our thoughts and direct our hands—should suggest to us our theories, and dictate our practice, if we would attain success. This is true not only of medicine, but of all the arts of life. When we depart from nature we depart from the true principle. And the greater violence we do to natural laws, the more variable, uncertain and impossible of success will be all our efforts.

Impressed with these convictions, I made up my mind that the method of treating many diseases, and especially affections of the lungs and air passages as universally practiced, was at once a perversion of natural laws—a departure from the principles of direct and curative treatment laid down by medical authority for the cure of other classes of disease, and consequently ineffectual and impossible of accomplishing curative results.

There is nothing in the nature of affections of the lungs and air passages to render them incurable, any more than there is in any other diseases of the body. Disease of the lungs usually begins, as I have pointed out in the columns of the Specialist, by irritation set up in the membrane. This comes from cold or other causes. Inflammatory action follows. Ulceration supervenes and rapidly disorganizes and destroys an essential organ of life, if allowed to progress.

This is the ordinary form and course of lung disease. When taken in time such a disease is not considered by medical men incurable in other parts of the body. Why? Because they treat it by direct and effective means. They stop the irritation or inflammatory action; or, if it has gone on to ulceration, they cleanse the dead matter from the living, by the use of remedies which act both on the surface and surrounding parts where the disease is situated.

But in affections of the air passages, where the most delicate and impressible tissue of the whole body is found, this direct and natural practice has been utterly ignored. The stomach has been made the receptacle of medicines intended to act on the inner surface of the lungs. It has been nauseated, demoralized and paralyzed by medicines until it has been rendered incapable of doing its necessary work of digestion and assimilation. This in no way benefits the disease in the lungs, while it certainly adds to it impaired nutrition, causing the body to waste away with accelerated speed.

Now what I have contended for in regard to all affections of the air passages is, that the acknowledged principles of medical practice should be consistently carried out when we come to treat those affections. I contend that it is the complete and utter departure from those principles which has rendered diseases of the lungs "the reproach of medical practice." Instead of being direct, curative and comprehensive, the ordinary course of treatment has been indirect, palliative and partial. The result of such practice has been inevitable and universal failure, not because the disease is hitherto incurable, but because the means employed and the method of employing them were inadequate to the end, and could, in no case, reach the seat of the malady on which they were intended to act.

To reach effectually the seat of the disease, we must adapt the method of administering our remedies to the parts affected. We wash or poultice a sore on the surface of the body. We give a pill or a draught when we want to reach the stomach, or bowels, or liver, etc. We use a variety of instruments invented for the purpose of injecting or applying by direct contact such remedies as we desire to apply to other portions of the body. Why, then, depart from this effective and rational practice when we come to the lungs?

The lungs can receive nothing but air. Their structure is delicate, in accordance with their functions. Air to them is as palpable and real an application as water is to the surface of the body. But we can charge this air to any extent we please with medicinal properties. And we can act upon the membrane and tissue of the lungs by medicated air as effectually, as rapidly and as thoroughly as we can act upon the outer surface of the body by a wash, or on the inner surface of the stomach and bowels by a pill or a draught.

I cannot therefore but regard as a monstrous absurdity any effort to cure a disease seated within the lungs by other means than such as enter the lungs themselves. I do not deny the importance of "constitutional treatment" in certain cases, but when a patient is suffering for breath, the local irritation and obstruction is in the lungs, and he will die if not relieved. The first effort, therefore, should be to get within more air, to relieve irritation, and stop the spreading of the inflammation along the air passages, to soothe and cleanse the inflamed or ulcerated surface; to expel by effective inhalations the morbid secretions which clog the air passages. All this can be effected by local application. And as no other force but air can with impunity enter those passages, they can be reached only by inhaled remedies. The proper treatment of the lungs is not based on the use of specific medicines so much as on the natural and effective method of administering them.

There is no "patent" in the matter. I have no secret prescriptions or formulæ which I would not willingly make known under judicious circumstances. It is altogether a matter of experience, and the skill which long and close observation of effects gives to the practitioner. I wish it to be clearly understood, therefore, that when I advocate inhalation as a method of treatment, I do not mean one, two or a dozen specific medicines. I mean simply a rational, natural, effective and legitimate practice—a practice far more orthodox, and far more in accordance with the sound and true principles of medicine, than the fallacious practice of former years, which it is destined to replace.

Even such a simple disease as Nasal Catarrh has constantly baffled the efforts of our most enlightened physicians and yet no disease is more easily cured, if properly treated. We do not affirm that it was always owing to the inability of the physician to cope with the disease, but we do claim that the universal lack of success was, in a great measure, owing to carelessness and the want of research, attention and activity in the use of the remedies employed. As a rule, this disease has been slighted, and the terrible fact that, unless cured, it must sooner or later end in consumption, entirely ignored.

As for the curability of diseases of the lungs themselves, we can only say that in this city alone there are large numbers who have been under our professional care in past years, and who will at the present moment bear testimony to the soundness of our theory and practice, the justice of our claims, and the permanency of the benefits to be obtained through the course pursued by us in the treatment of such diseases.

We will be pleased to refer to former patients in the city and all parts of the country, if desired.

DR. HUNTER'S PRACTICE.

DR. HUNTER.

We have been publishing, from time to time, letters of Catarrh and diseases of the Lungs, by Dr. Hunter, and we have published a number of testimonials to Cures by his method of treatment. We also have seen letters from various persons, including one of our subscribers, testifying to the efficacy of Dr. Hunter's treatment. Below is an editorial article from the pen of the Rev. Jesse H. Berry, an assistant editor of the American Christian Review:

"I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to the gentleman [illegible] an whose name introduces this article. I regard him as one of the few whose professed mission is 'to cure the ills which human flesh is heir to,' whose skill and remedies are all that is claimed for them.

"For about one year I had been suffering from an affection of the throat, which at first was annoying, and afterward developed symptoms which I considered dangerous. The voice grew rough and husky, the palate and mucous lining of the throat became inflamed and at times painful, and I feared at one time that I would be compelled to cease speaking in public. Remedies were tried, some of which gave partial and temporary relief, while others did not seem to influence the disease in the least. When Dr. Hunter began the publication of his interesting letters in the Review I commenced to read them. They seemed to be so much common sense in his statements that I was induced to apply to him. I obtained his 'Inhalator' and remedies, and by following a few simple directions an entire and, I think, permanent cure was effected in the short space of three months. My throat is well, and I am in the enjoyment of the most vigorous, robust health. Several of my personal friends who were similarly affected I recommended to try Dr. Hunter's remedies. They did so, and so far as I have learned of the result they have either been cured or are rapidly improving. In a letter before me a professor in one of our colleges, and who was afflicted with throat disease for years, and who has been using the 'Inhalator,' says: 'All traces of the disease have left me, and I am a well man.'

"In these days of quackery and deception, to know that there are physicians in whose ability and integrity we can have confidence is no small matter. This statement respecting Dr. Hunter is voluntary on our part. We commend him to the afflicted readers of the Review.

JESSE H. BERRY."

The Son of a King.

One fine summer evening a crowd of workmen were passing along through the streets of the city of Hamburg. As the multitude swept by, an old shoemaker was sitting under a shade before his door, busily engaged in mending a shoe. Sometimes he would stop a little from his work, and sing a verse or two of one of the old German psalms which he loved very much. A well-dressed young man, a student in the university, was passing this evening. When he heard the merry voice of the shoemaker he stopped and said to him:

"Well, my friend, you seem to be happy and contented."

"I am happy, sir," said the old man; "and why shouldn't I be?"

"I don't know," said the student. "A great many people are not happy. You seem to be very poor. I suppose you have none but yourself to work for?"

"You are mistaken, sir," said the shoemaker; "I have a wife and seven children to feed and support with the work of these hands. I'm a poor man, it's true, but that is no reason why I shouldn't work and be happy."

"I am very much surprised to see a poor workman like you so content, and I don't understand what can make you so."

"Stranger," said the shoemaker, laying down his work, and taking hold of the young man's arm with a grave and serious look—"stranger, I am not so poor as you think. Let me tell you, I am a son of the King."

The young man turned away, saying to himself: "Poor fellow, he is crazy. He imagines he is well off when he is poor. This is what makes him happy. I was beginning to think that perhaps he might be able to tell me the great secret I am seeking—that of true happiness. But I was mistaken."

A week passed by, and the young student again had occasion to pass the same street. He found the old shoemaker sitting in the same place, still busy with his work, and singing as cheerfully as before. As he drew near the young man lifted his cap in a mocking sort of way, and, making a bow to the shoemaker, said: "Good morning, Mr. Prince."

"Stop, my friend," said the shoemaker; laying down his work; "I wish to say a few words to you, if you please. You left me suddenly the other evening, as if you thought that I was crazy."

"To tell you the truth," said the young man, "that is just what I did think."

"Well, my friend," continued the shoemaker, "I am not crazy. What I then said I said in earnest. It is true, every word of it. I am a son of the King. Just sit down here and listen while I tell you about it."

Now this young man was a Jew. He had been taught to read the Old Testament Scriptures when he was a child, and to believe in them. But since he had grown up he had given up his faith in the Bible, and had ceased to read it. He was like a sailor out at sea who has lost his compass. He could not tell whither he was going, or how to steer, and this made him feel very miserable. Just as a drowning man will catch at straws, so this young man was ready to catch at anything that seemed likely to help him in trying to find out how to be happy. He sat down, therefore, and listened to his humble friend.

Then the shoemaker began, and told him of the promises of the Old Testament about a glorious King who was to be Savior and Ruler of the world. He showed him that all the things that are written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, about this glorious King, had been fulfilled in Jesus Christ. He declared how he had suffered and died for our sins; how he had risen from the grave, and had gone up to take his seat in glory at the right hand of God. He told how he had sent his messengers into all the world, to tell men what he had done for them; and how all who had repented of their sins and believed in him would be pardoned and made happy now, and at last be saved in heaven forever; and that Jesus was going to come back again to this world, in his own appointed time, to set up a glorious kingdom, and that all who love and serve him now will share the glories of his kingdom and reign with him.

The young student sat listening with great interest to what his poor friend was saying. He had often read the promises of the Old Testament, but he had never thought of them in connection with Jesus Christ. This was all new to him. He was astonished at what he heard.

"And now, young man," said the shoemaker, "don't you see how truly I could say: 'I am a son of the King?' Don't you see what reason I have to be contented and happy? It is because I belong to Jesus. I believe in him, and I love him. The Bible tells me that all things shall work together for good to me, and that all things are mine, because I am Christ's. Isn't this enough to make one happy?"

"Where can I learn more about these things?" asked the young man. "I see that you believe them, and this gives you peace and contentment. O how I long for them!" Then the shoemaker gave the young man a copy of the Bible. He told him to take it home and read it carefully, and to pray over its contents. The young Jewish student read the Bible diligently, and in so doing found the secret of true peace of mind. He afterward became a missionary to his own people, and preached to them about the peace and joy he had found in Jesus.—Early Days.

The Blind Girl and Her Bible.

A little girl who loved the Bible dearly became blind, and when she could no longer see to read it she only loved it more. A kind friend gave her a New Testament, printed for the use of the blind, in raised letters, which she could feel with her fingers, and so make out. Never was a child more delighted than she. It was a touching thing to see her, every moment she could spare, passing her fingers slowly over the pages, as her lips silently uttered the precious words. But her touch was not quick enough for her; her fingereuds, poor child, were rough, and sometimes she had to stop a long time over a word. So one day she took a pen-knife and lightly pared away the skin from just the tips of her flugers, hoping that so her feeling would be more tender, and she could get on faster. What was her distress in finding, after a few days, that her skin had grown again, but so hard that she could not feel the shape of a single letter! She tried and tried, but all in vain; then, bursting into an agony of tears, she pressed the much-loved pages to her lips, to bid them, as she thought, a last farewell. But as she did so she suddenly found out that her lips had the feeling which her fingers had lost. The letters, the words, were quite plain! I cannot tell you her joy that she still could read. And hundreds of times since the blessed book has been held to her lips, not in sorrow, for a farewell kiss, but in thankfulness and joy, that even she can read the words of everlasting life.

Let this blest volume ever lie
Close to my heart and near my eye;
To life's last hour my thoughts engage,
And be my chosen heritage.

The Shining Light.

Ants in Central America.

The thriftiest people in Central America are the smallest—the ants. Some of them are wonderful workers. There is one kind, a sort of wee, wee truffle-growers, who live together in immense swarms and do such a deal of cutting up that it is almost as much as the forests can do to stand against them. They are called leaf-cutters for the reason that they send out armies of thousands and thousands to bring in leaves, which they cut from the trees in such quantities that whole plantations of mango, orange and lemon-trees are sometimes stripped and killed.

Do they eat the leaves? Not at all. They live on funny little truffles, or fungi, of their own raising. They use the leaves only to make hot-beds for their dainty plants, in chambers under ground. One colony of leaf-cutters will have a great many of these cellar chambers, all united by tunnels for quick transit, and well supplied with what builders call ventilating shafts; for the ants are very particular about having plenty of fresh air. These shafts reach to the surface of the ground. Each chamber is about as large as a man's head, and is kept a little more than half full of cut leaves, overgrown with the small white fungus which the ants cultivate for food.

There are three kinds of ants in each colony: the workers, who go off to the woods for leaves, and have all the outside work to do; some very small ants, who stay at home and spend their time cutting up the leaves that are brought in, and taking care of the baby ants; and a few gigantic fellows, who manage things, and do all the fighting in time of war. Let any enemy disturb the workers going out for leaves or bringing them home, and instantly the soldiers will rush out in force, with their big jaws wide open, and settle things in short order. The little nurses come out sometimes too, but only for fun or exercise. When they haven't anything to do, and the weather is fine, they like to take a run out with the workers, but they do not bring any loads back. When one of them gets tired, he just climbs up on a leaf that a worker is bringing in—as you might climb up on a load of hay—and so enjoys a nice ride home.—St. Nicholas.

A HERO.—"If I were a general," said Freddie, laying down his history, "I should be happy."

"Are you not happy now?" asked Aunt Margaret.

"O yes; but I long to be a hero. It is something to be a hero; do you not think so?"

"Yes," said Aunt Margaret, "I admire a hero. Shall I tell you how you may become one now—a boy hero, which I think is far more noble than being a general?"

"Yes," said Freddie, eagerly, "do tell me."

"By being master of yourself. Do not give way to angry, wicked feelings. The Bible says: 'He that is slow to anger, is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city.' Think of this, and when tempted to do wrong, fight for the right, and you will be a hero greater than a general."—Children's Friend.

GENEROSITY during life is a very different thing from generosity in the hour of death; the one proceeds from liberality and benevolence, the other from pride or fear.—Horace Mann.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Value of Tap-Roots.

English books and practice advise the suppression of tap-roots. It is an established principle in their arboriculture that these should be checked, and horizontal roots encouraged as much as possible. In planting wall-trees in gardens they sometimes lay an impervious pavement down in the soil under the trees as a precaution against the dreaded canker of the stem. We follow this lead. Our nurserymen find that a tree transplants better for having many small roots, disposed to run through the rich surface soil, rather than two or three vertical prongs. But it is very doubtful whether there is substantial advantage in this course, applied in our hot, dry climate, for we find that trees in forests and along fences, which have "come by chance," and have never felt steel in their roots, either of pruning-knife or plow, will maintain health and productiveness to an extreme old age. Nursery-grown trees, cultivated in orchards, sicken every few years after severe vicissitudes of weather, and perish prematurely.

Even where the subsoil is impervious hard-pan all around, so that there is drainage, we find the self-planted tree enduring, although its roots are necessarily horizontal, because they cannot penetrate the hard-pan, or if they do they are pinched off by the poisonous nature of the subsoil, or drowned off by the water which is held all the year near the surface. In such soils the forest-trees—which are apt to be blown over in storms because they are only standing on the hard-pan, and not anchored in it—show, when uprooted, a perfectly flat mesh of horizontal roots. A tree with this form of roots will not live long in rich, well-drained soil in our climate, evidently because it is irregularly supplied. It is all feast or famine with it—repletion or dronth. After a rain the growth is suddenly inordinate, and again, in our frequent summer dronths, even the roots are dried. Soon the stem begins to decay, owing to these alternations, and then the tree irretrievably declines.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.—A correspondent of a Vicksburg paper gives an account of a new invention, now in practical operation at the Union Cotton Mills, near Bolton station, on the Memphis and Charleston railroad, which, if it proves to be all that is represented, must have a more important effect upon the production and manufacture of cotton than even Whitney's cotton gin has had. It does away with the ordinary process of ginning, converting the cotton, just as it is taken from the field, into thread of superior quality. It costs only $250, and is attached to the ordinary card stand. It is said that specimens of thread made by this machine have been sent to nearly all the Northern manufacturers, and have been pronounced stronger and more lustrous than that spun by the ordinary method. It is claimed that a thread spun by this means will sustain fully one-third more weight than a thread of equal size made of cotton that has passed through the processes of compression and the complicated machinery of common cotton mills. The great importance of the invention, however, consists in the fact that by its cheapness and simplicity it may be introduced into common use, the natural result of which will be to transfer the whole work of cotton-spinning from manufactories to the cotton-field, thus effecting a great saving in the cost of packing and transportation, and in other expenses. The Rake.

THE PINEAPPLE.—The history of the pineapple dates back for three or four centuries. Columbus found it on the Island of Guadeloupe in 1492. The Japanese cultivated it as early as 1599, and it is supposed that it was first brought to Europe from Java. It appears that this fruit was transplanted from South America to Asia and Africa, for in 1592 it was carried to Bengal and China from that country. It thrived in Brazil, and, according to Humboldt, grows wild in the forest of Orinoco. They spoil very easily, and sometimes during the voyage here the whole cargo of a vessel is spoiled. It is considered a good trip if three-quarters of the cargo is in good condition when the vessel arrives. This depends not only upon the length of the voyage, but also on the bad weather experienced, thunder showers being particularly destructive to them. It is estimated that four million two hundred thousand pineapples are brought into New York annually. The business of canning this fruit is becoming quite extensive, and likewise profitable in this city, and several firms are engaged in this preparation, and they put up at least a million pineapples in cans every year.

BED-BUGS.—A correspondent of a Northern paper writes: "After fighting them eight years, I learned from a girl, who had served as chamber-maid in a large boarding-house, that bugs could be entirely exterminated for all time. I immediately followed her directions, which was to take grease that was melted out of salt pork, to melt it, and to keep it melted (the vessel can be kept in a pan of coals,) and to put it with the feather-end of a quill in every place where I could find a bug. It is necessary to see that the bed-cords are entirely free from the pests, and I will warrant there will be no more trouble. It is more than thirty years since a bug has been seen in my house."

GRAFTING.—Seeding stocks for root-grafting should be lifted in and heeled in the cellar, where they can be easily reached during the winter. Cut scions after the tree has stopped growing, and bury in sandy soil in the cellar, or pack in sawdust.

THE death of Christ is alone meritorious; no saint can merit anything for himself, much less have his merits imputed to others.—Lange.

RENOVATING BITTERS!!

Purify the Blood.

STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flushes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all Bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Albuminoids	12.45	Sugar	13.06
Oil	5.21	Starch	55.62
Ash	3.59	Cellulose	2.95
Water	8.12

It will be seen that the Albuminoids (albumen, gluten, casein, etc.) constitute nearly thirteen per cent. These says Youmans, "are the Vesicating principles—the true elements of nutrition."

It is particularly valuable to all requiring a highly nutritious and at the same time easily-digested diet and hence is used as an article of food in consumption in climates which occasion rapid waste in the system. "Almost all Asiatic, African and (aboriginal) Americans use it as their chief nutriment."—Louis Figuier, in his Vegetable World.

Hermetically-sealed YARMOUTH SUGAR CORN retains all the nutritive qualities of the grain as served. The grain is cut from the ear and packed in tin canisters with the rich juices (or milk) which exude from it, and is then sealed air-tight while the canister subjected to steam heat, which dilates the contents. In this condition it will keep for years. It will be seen by this that all the nutritive properties of the grain are preserved, and a most nourishing article of food in the domain placed within the reach of all.

Thos. Broughton, with John D. Park, of Cincinnati, says: "W. C. Hamilton & Co.—I had had the Ague for two long years, and had tried several remedies of acknowledged or pretended merit without any good result. I finally tried your preparation—KRESS FEVER TONIC. One bottle completely broke up the malady, and I am now perfectly well. I can testify that your medicine does all you claim for it; and it is only due to you that this acknowledgment should be made, especially as so many worthless chill medicines are now offered."

Louisiana and Mississippi	bales... 32,495
Tennessee	2,957
Arkansas	3,753
Mobile	2,272
Texas	132
Total	43,111

On Saturday the business was confined to 4,950 bales. An unusual proportion of the offerings consisted of the grades below low middling, which were neglected and ruled more in favor of buyers, while the better qualities were in light supply and commanded full prices. Ordinary sold at 11½c., strict ordinary at 12c., good ordinary at 13⅛c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 14⅛@14¼c., strict good ordinary to low middling nt 14⅜c., low middling at 14⅝@15c., strict low middling as low as 15⅛c., strict low middling to middling at 15⅜c., and middling at 15¾@16c. On Monday the market opened with a fair demand and factors asking stiffer prices, in accordance with the advance at New York, but buyers refused to go on unless at Saturday's rates or a fraction less, and up to noon only a limited business had been done, hardly reaching 2,000 bales, mostly at figures showing no quotable variation, after which the pressure of the heavy supply of the medium and lower grades enabled buyers to obtain some concessions, which stimulated the demand, and the movement became quite active, resulting in sales of 12,600 bales. On Tuesday the market opened with a much less general demand, but, as some of the buyers who came forward during the morning operated with considerable spirit, the sales up to noon reached 4,000 bales, at prices indicating no quotable variation, after which the movement became still more animated, and the entire sales of the day summed up a little over 9,700 bales.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 27,250 bales, against 32,750 for the corresponding time last week and 23,350 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 532,147 bales, against 475,849 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 127,964 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 54,935 to Great Britain, and of 4,689 to France, and a decrease of 88,111 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Ordinary	11⅛ @ 12
Strict ordinary	12⅛ @ 13

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

Mr. Merton submitted the following, and asked for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate recognizes the validity of the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback as certified to by Governor William P. Kellogg, of Louisiana, under the seal of said State, and the committee on privileges and elections are instructed to examine and report if the said Pinchback is entitled to be admitted on the prima facie case thus made, or if such admission should be postponed until investigation be made as to the charges of corruption in his election alleged against him.

Mr. Thurman objected to the present consideration of the resolution and it went over.

Mr. Clayton submitted the following, and asked its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested, if not incompatible with the interests of the public service, to lay before the Senate the official reports and communications of Major Lewis Merrill, United States army, relating to certain disorders in Louisiana, known as the Coushatta trouble.

Mr. Bayard objected and it was laid over.

House.—Messrs. Coburn, of Indiana, Albright, of Pennsylvania, Connor, of Illinois, Buckner, of Missouri, and Luttrell, of California, were appointed the select committee on Alabama affairs. The first three are Republicans, and the other two Democrats.

All the committees for the South will leave Washington next Saturday.

House adjourned until Tuesday, January 5.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 24.—The board of engineers' upon the reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi river adjourned today until the first Monday in January, for the purpose of preparing and maturing their report, and also to enable the military engineers of the commission to make their quarterly reports, as required by the army regulations.

It may be gratifying to the poor suffering people living in the alluvial basin of the Mississippi river to know that President Grant entertains liberal views on this subject. The President has frequently expressed his opinion upon this matter. He is in favor of protecting the great cotton and sugar interests. Congressional action, of course, is of absolute necessity, without which nothing can be done.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—Governor McEuery, in a dispatch dated the twenty-fifth, to the Herald, says:

"The wrong just perpetrated by the Returning Board against the people of Louisiana, and which vitally threatens the safety and integrity of republican institutions in the United States, is a more crowning infamy than the action of the Lynch Returning Board, surpasses even the midnight order of Durell, and would not be submitted to by any free people. Resistance to the national authority, represented here by a large portion of the army, and with a naval fleet sustaining a usurpation and stifling the voice of the people, has never been meditated.

JOHN MCENERY."

SHREVEPORT, Dec. 26.—A committee of the leading citizens of this and the adjoining parishes to-day presented a valuable gold watch and chain to each of the editors of the Times, Messrs. Leonard, Battle and Hearsey. The watches are inscribed: "From the citizens of North Louisiana, in appreciation of a noble defense of their rights."

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Gerritt Smith is dead.

MONTGOMERY, Dec. 28.—The negroes are contracting with the planters for next year. There is less talk about going West.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 29.—The cabinet to-day had Louisiana matters under consideration. Attorney General Williams expressed his views upon the action of the Returning Board, strongly asserting his opinion that it was legal and correct in all its particulars, and said it should be sustained by the government at all hazards.

There was some conversation upon the reports of probable violations of the public peace upon the assembling of the Legislature on the fourth of January, and the opinion was expressed that the United States force now stationed at New Orleans was amply sufficient to prevent any serious outbreaks, should any such occur.

The Senate caucus committee on cheap transportation expect to have their report ready on the reassembling of Congress.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—Bismarck has moved in the Federal Council for an extradition treaty with the United States, making it uniform throughout the empire.

MADRID, Dec. 29.—An engagement has taken place at the town of Rodax, in the province of Barcelona, between a band of Carlists and a body of national troops, in which the former were defeated with the loss of thirty men killed.

THINKING is the least exerted privilege of cultivated humanity.

Mississippi Conference.

FOURTH DAY.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Dec. 19, 1874.

Religious exercises by Rev. A. Day.

The Conference resumed the examination of the character of the elders. Oliver H. P. Davis, J. W. Hall, David W. Dillehay, James W. Lambuth (missionary in China,) and Richard Abbey, passed.

A letter of fraternal greeting was read from Bro. Abbey to the Conference.

Rev. J. L. Forsyth, presiding elder, presented the recommendation of William Naylor, colored, for ordination as a deacon, and was elected.

The hour having arrived to consider the special order of the day, to wit: the substitution of a new General Rule on the subject of making, buying and selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage, the vote was taken and resulted as follows: For the change, 30; against the change, 75.

The Conference then took up the examination of the character of the superannuated preachers. A. Day passed and continued in a superannuated relation.

J. G. Jones, now among the oldest members of the Conference, when his name was called, rose up at the request of the Conference and gave a most interesting and touching account of his ministerial life—now fifty years. After singing an appropriate verse, amid deep emotion pervading the Conference, Bishop Paine followed with remarks that will long be remembered by the members. Bro. Jones' character was then passed by a rising vote of the Conference, and he was continued in a superannuated relation.

Thomas Clinton, Barnabas Pipkin, J. B. Higginbotham, William Finn, H. Copeland and L. Pearce passed and were continued in a superannuated relation.

In reference to H. Copeland and L. Pearce it was resolved that these brethren (now in British Honduras,) having been within the bounds of the Jackson district when they emigrated, hereafter the presiding elder of that district will be expected to represent them in Conference.

The following resolution, offered by A. M. Campbell, was adopted:

Resolved, That our venerable and beloved brother, J. G. Jones, be requested to preach a sermon on the Conference floor at the next Conference, at such an hour as may then be determined. A. M. CAMPBELL.
J. T. CAMERON.
E. C. POSTELL.

The committee on the state of the church made their report, showing a gratifying state of the church in all her departments, after which the Conference joined in singing the doxology, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. A. Godfrey.

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," etc.,

The committee of nominations provided for yesterday was announced by the Bishop, as follows: J. G. Jones, W. H. Watkins and J. A. Godfrey.

The Conference ordered the publication of the report of the committee on the state of the church in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Rev. H. H. Montgomery, treasurer of the Adelaide Gearing fund, reported $12 interest collected on said fund, and on motion the same was appropriated to defraying the expenses of Miss A. Dillehay, now at Whitworth College.

Rev. J. W. Adkisson asked leave of absence for the balance of the session.

FIFTH DAY.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Dec. 21, 1874.

Conference met at nine A. M., Bishop Paine in the chair.

Religious services were conducted by J. Bancroft.

Bishop Paine reported that he had ordained on yesterday J. W. Ellison, J. W. McLaurin and T. B. Holloman traveling deacons.

H. A. Henrickson, A. White, W. G. Ball, R. W. Barton, and W. Naylor, colored, local deacons.

R. D. Norsworthy, D. G. W. Ellis, T. B. Walden and H. R. Singleton traveling elders.

W. Hoover and J. L. Vinson local elders.

Rev. H. M. Church, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was introduced to the Conference.

The twentieth question was resumed.

G. T. Vickers was passed, and was granted a supernumerary relation. E. W. Simmons was passed and announced as transferred to the Northwest Texas Conference. S. R. Hyde was passed, and on motion of R. B. Downer was granted a location at his own request. C. Chamberlin was passed and announced as having been transferred to the Pacific Conference, and stationed at Sacramento City. J. J. Clark was passed and located at his own request.

W. G. Millsaps' name was called, and J. G. Jones, chairman, read the report of the committee in this case—that a legal investigation of the case was due all parties.

J. N. Williams passed and continued in the supernumerary relation. G. W. Chatfield passed and granted a location at his own request.

The hour of twelve having arrived, the order of the day, question 30, was called—Where shall the next session of the Conference be held? Vicksburg, Port Gibson, Canton, Enterprise and Hazlehurst were nominated, and Canton was chosen as the place.

Resumed.—Are all the preachers blameless in their lives and official administration?

W. B. Hines and J. T. Heard passed. F. Walker passed, and was granted a location at his own request. J. Nicholson and James Shanks passed, and were both granted a superannuated relation.

W. L. Nugent presented and read the report of the joint board of finance, which was adopted, together with the distribution of the funds. The following is a synopsis of the report: Amount due on Bishops' salary, $880; amount collected and surplus of last year on this account, $1,319.15; leaving a balance in favor of the Conference of $437.15, which the board recommend should go to make up the very large deficiency in the Bishops' salaries remaining unpaid. The amount estimated as necessary to meet the usual claims on Conference fund was $5,000; amount received, $1,950.

The estimate of $5,000 the board considered too great, or more than was necessary, and they estimated $2,600 as sufficient for next year, and for the support of the Bishops $1,000. They apportioned this amount among the several districts as follows:

	Bishops' fund.	Conf'ce fund.
Vicksburg	$185 00	$500 00
Jackson	185 00	475 00
Brandon	100 00	225 00
Brookhaven	140 00	400 00
Woodville	120 00	385 00
Seashore	65 00	160 00
Meridian	120 00	300 00
Summit	75 00	175 00
Total	$1,090 00	$2,600 00

(The distribution of the funds on hand among the several claimants not being a matter of public interest, we omit it.—EDS.)

Bishop Paine announced a committee of thirteen, according to the Discipline, to try the case of Rev. W. G. Millsaps.

MONDAY, Dec. 21, 3½ P. M.

The committee on religious literature read their report, which was adopted, with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Rev. Drs. W. H. Watkins, C. G. Andrews and Rev. H. F. Johnson be appointed a committee who shall confer with Rev. J. G. Jones, and get his "History of Methodism in Mississippi" published, as soon as practicable, at our Publishing House, if possible; if not, elsewhere. And from the proceeds, if there be any above the expense of publication, remunerate the author as they deem just.

Resolved, That all of our preachers be earnestly solicited and expected to co-operate as best they can in this work.

Resolved, That on account of the superior value of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and from the fact that it is our own Conference organ, it becomes our first duty, in circulating religious literature, to present the claims of this journal.

J. G. Guice offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the members of this Conference, ministerial and lay, be requested to raise at an early day each the sum of $20, or as much as they can, to secure the publication of the "History of Methodism in Mississippi," by Rev. John G. Jones, now ready for publication, and that the subscribers therefor have copies of said work equal to the amount subscribed, to be distributed among them by the brother taking the subscription. S. L. GUICE.
W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

W. L. C. Hunnicutt, secretary of the Missionary Board, made a report, recommending a constitution for the future government of the board, which was adopted.

The following were elected on the Conference Missionary Board to serve for the next four years, viz.:

The presiding elders of the Conference and C. B. Galloway, W. L. Nugent, W. L. C. Hunnicutt, B. G. Humphreys, W. H. Watkins, J. A. Nettles, T. Price, W. Hoover, E. H. Mounger, I. V. Enochs, W. H. Leith, I. Miller, J. A. Ellis, S. B. Watts, B. Jones and T. J. Feezell.

On motion of S. B. Watts the following was adopted:

Resolved, That the attention of presiding elders of this Conference be called to the unsettled condition of the titles to the church property in many instances, and that they be instructed to do all in their power to have such titles perfected.

SIXTH DAY.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., Dec. 22, 1874.

Question 1—Who are admitted on trial?—was taken up. V. H. Nelson, B. Caradine, T. W. Adams, C. J. Phillips, J. Q. Hicks, C. W. Reid, J. A. Givens, C. D. Cecil, R. T. Davis, R. F. Flowers, E. Burkhalter, W. W. Hopper, T. Cotton and G. W. Davidson.

The committee on education made their report, which was adopted, with the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we are more than ever convinced of the propriety and necessity of the dissemination of sanctified learning among the people, and that we will continue to support and patronize our own schools and colleges.

Resolved, That we recommend to the board of trustees of Sharon Female College that they transfer this property to the control and care of the Jackson District Conference, to be utilized at the discretion of that Conference.

Resolved, That in view of bringing the subject of education more prominently before the people, we recommend that during the month of May next this subject be brought before our various congregations in such a way as parties may think best, and that on these occasions, at the discretion of the ministers in charge, collections be made in every congregation to assist in the payment of tuition for candidates for the ministry within our bounds and attending our colleges, and that the funds so collected be forwarded at once to Rev. C. G. Andrews, treasurer of the Ministerial Education Association of the Conference.

The committee on Sunday schools made their report, showing the number of schools to be 180; volumes in library, 16,125.

They proposed the following resolutions, which were adopted:

Resolved, That we seek to secure the increased circulation of our Sunday-school literature, and indorsed as recommended by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Resolved, That we give unremitting diligence and care to all the departments of Sunday school work, and seek the conversion and salvation of the children and youth committed to our care.

J. BANCROFT, Sec.

Bishop Paine announced the following committees of examination:

Rev. H. H. Montgomery moved that Rev. J. W. Adams and O. H. P. Davis be granted each a location at his own request. Granted.

P. S. Petty was granted a location at his own request.

E. A. Flowers was on motion granted a supernumerary relation to this Conference.

C. C. Watkins was admitted into full connection in the Conference in deacon's orders. The committee in the case of W. G. Millsaps made their report, which was in substance that the charge against him is not sustained. On motion the character of W. G. Millsaps passed, and he was granted a location at his own request.

The following visiting committees to the literary institutions under the patronage of the Conference were announced:

To Centenary College.—W. L. C. Hunnicutt, E. H. Mounger and J. Bancroft.

To Whitworth College.—C. B. Galloway, W. C. Ballard and C. J. Nugent.

To East Mississippi College.—W. H. Leith, Dr. West and J. T. Heard.

To Collegiate Academy.—W. H. Watkins, J. L. Forsyth and H. Singleton.

After some further business Rev. John G. Jones read and sung a hymn and offered prayer.

The Bishop then made a most impressive address to the preachers, and proceeded to read the

THE RESURRECTION.

A seed found in the hand of a mummy, two thousand years old, when planted, bloomed into a beautiful flower.

Two thousand years ago a flower
Bloomed brightly in a far off land;
Two thousand years ago its seed
Was placed within a dead man's hand.

Before the Savior came to earth
That man had lived and loved and died,
And even in that far off time
That flower had spread its perfume wide.

Suns rose and set, years came and went,
The dead hand kept its treasure well;
Nations were born and turned to dust
While life was hidden in that shell.

The shriveled hand is robed at last,
The seed is buried in the earth;
When lo, the life long hidden there
Into a glorious flower burst forth!

Just such a plant as that which grew
From such a seed when buried low,
Just such a flower in Egypt bloomed
And died two thousand years ago.

And will not He who watched the seed
And kept the life within the shell,
When those he loves are laid to rest,
Watch o'er their buried dust as well?

And will he not from 'neath the sod
Cause something glorious to arise?
Aye, though it sleep two thousand years,
Yet all that buried dust shall rise.

Just such a form as here we wear,
Only more glorious far, will rise
To meet the Savior in the air.

Then will I lay me down in peace
When called to leave this vale of tears,
For "in my flesh shall I see God."
E'en though I sleep two thousand years.

Report of the Committee

ON THE STATE OF THE CHURCH, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The committee who were appointed to consider the state of the church offer the following report:

Any view of our ecclesiastical condition which should ignore or disregard the peculiar infelicities of our political status would be unjust alike to the ministry and laity of our church. We live under governmental oppression grievous to be borne, amid financial disasters and pecuniary dearth, and groan beneath a burden of taxation which paralyzes our energies and exhausts our resources. Yet our people have not abandoned the work of the Lord, but in spite of all hinderances have done nobly in his cause.

We are exceedingly gratified, in surveying the fields occupied by our laborers, to find so many indications of the blessings of God upon the work of our ministry, and of healthy growth in almost every department of that church in which, under God, we are privileged to live and labor. Notwithstanding the scarcity of money, our ministers have in most instances been well and cheerfully supported; contributions for the widows, orphans and superannuated preachers have increased; our missionary collections are larger than they were last year; and our Sunday schools, which have long been a beauty and a glory in the church, have not only well sustained their former promise, but have in many places organized juvenile missionary societies, which are rivaling or outstripping the churches in missionary contributions.

The additions to our membership during the year amount to nearly three thousand, while the sum total of members in the Mississippi Conference exceeds twenty thousand souls. Nearly a thousand infants have been baptized by our ministers during the year, to be trained up in the way they should go. Our missionaries have, without exception, faithfully performed the work assigned them, some of them without even the hope of any other pecuniary reward than the pittance they might receive from the poor among whom they labored, and all of them for salaries too small to support any man's energies unless supplemented by the hope of a heavenly inheritance.

Not a minister has been called by death from our ranks during the year, while the death rate among our membership has been less than the lowest estimate for lives carefully selected between these ages least subject to mortality.

The spiritual state of the church seems to be almost everywhere improved or improving. Class meetings and prayer meetings are better attended, family prayers and home religion are reviving in many places, and the members of the church are bringing themselves into stricter obedience to all her laws.

Our female members are taking unusually active interest in the welfare of the church, and are doing many things greatly promotive of its prosperity.

That there are localities within our bounds where these cheering indications are not to be found is doubtless true, and will no doubt continue to be true while the church remains in her militant state. But that there are many places in which they are to be seen should be cause of profoundest gratitude in all our hearts.

The strength of our itinerant army is being replenished each year, in answer to our prayers, by the addition of a goodly number of young men of more than ordinary promise. Thus God gives us, in many ways, indications of his favor and blessing. Health and peace have been in all our borders.

By these and many other tokens of good, in these trying and troublous times, we as ministers are enabled to heed the exhortation of the prophet, which says to us: "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God."

Let it be our one work to preach scriptural holiness through these lands, and to exhort especially our young members not to rest satisfied short of a comforting assurance of pardoned sin and a well-grounded hope of heaven.

In view of the foregoing and many similar facts, be it

Resolved, That we call upon our people to unite with us in offering up most sincere, humble and devout thanks and praise to the great Head of the church for the many indications of its favoring providence which we have enjoyed, and especially for that measure of success which has attended the gospel of his grace as administered by us.

Resolved, That while we would not be unduly elated by past success—while we would not be high-minded, but fear—we would gather hope, courage and confidence for future conflicts with the powers of darkness from the assurances of Heaven's approval and aid vouchsafed to us during the year that now draws to its close.

W. L. C. BENNICTT,
Chairman.

The Character of Balaam.

He was a gifted and great man. God generally gives one or two talents to each man, but to Balaam he gave five. As there are men to-day who, by the discipline of a fine mind, are like suns, and eclipse the light of the stars around them, so Balaam shone in his own country. Like Saul who, amid the assembled thousands of Israel, in later times, stood head and shoulders higher than them all, he was the greatest of Midian'e prophets, and occupied the magician's throne. His profession was one peculiar to heathen nations. They had their gods, each one having his sphere of government. Some presided over the battle-field, and in their hands held the destiny of nations. Others ripened or blasted the prospects of the agriculturist, or presided over homes, sending sunlight or shadow, as they pleased. The magicians were the medium of communication between the people and the gods. By means of sacrifices, and rites that were mysterious to the common people, they professed to obtain from the gods secrets of the future, and power to bring a curse or blessing upon any people they chose. Balaam would be initiated into the mysteries of this mysterious life, and as his views enlarged, and his acquaintance with the science became more profound, he would be regarded as a man of great promise. But he was not satisfied with an ordinary amount of professional knowledge. He sought to extract truth from other systems, that he might be peculiarly qualified to use his own.

They had much fragmentary knowledge of the true God in Mesopotamia. The crude theology borne by the different tribes, from the plain of Shinar to every part of the world, had left its mark in that country. A few scattered rays of truth gleamed amid its darkness. Abraham had dwelt there, and as he raised an altar to the true God in his home, he would become a center of divine light and knowledge. Jacob spent part of his earlier life there, and he would diffuse a knowledge of the true God. So that if a thoughtful man collected the various traditions, and, with an earnest desire for truth, searched them, he might obtain a faint though impressive glimpse of God. We suppose that Balaam did this. And was there not in his nature, as in all richly endowed natures, a craving for something more noble and lasting than magic could give? Did not his soul, scorning to riot amid the gore of its sacrifices, and refusing to listen to the jargon of the gods, yearn for he knew not what, but something adapted to his nature. And when he began to study traditions of divine truth, though they were materialized and imperfect, did he not feel that he held the thread by which he might be guided into the realm of truth, where his soul might realize the grandeur of its destiny? He would compare tradition with tradition until he had formed an idea of God's nature; and, while at the head of his profession, he was preparing to receive a nobler faith, and shine in a greater profession than that.

About this time, perhaps, tidings came to Mesopotamia of the descendants of Abraham, now a mighty people, who had left Egyptian slavery, and had lived during forty years in the desert. They heard of what God had done for Israel, and were filled with awe and wonder. He had turned the objects of Egyptian worship into a curse. He had even caused a tangible night to last seventy-two hours. When the people came to the Red sea God made an opening, that they might pass; and when only the Egyptians trod its bed the opening closed and they were drowned. During the desert life he had literally fed them with bread, and made waters to gush from a hard rock. These reports would attract Balaam's notice, and give him more correct and impressive views of Israel's God. Or he might make a tour to Midian during those forty years, and gain much knowledge there. Still his views were imperfect, and when framing his ideal of God he would invest him in part with the attributes of a heathen god. If he had not heard of his changeless nature, he would think of him as one who might be caused to change. Yet he knew enough of God to feel that he was the greatest of known deities, and that a knowledge of him was a necessity of man's moral nature. Amid heathen darkness Balaam professed his faith in Jehovah, and named himself his prophet. And God actually did reveal himself in visions of the night, and would have increased the prophet's knowledge and obtained possession of his heart. But Balaam never rose above the dominion of fear. This is the result of God's first act upon the soul—the first touch of God produces fear. Balaam feared God intensely. While he sought to know more of his nature, and while God condescended to teach him, he thought of God as a Being of power—as one who could crush him, as he had crushed Pharaoh; and he had such a vivid idea of Jehovah's superior strength that he would die sooner than disobey his command. He advanced no farther than this. He never reached the top of the plane, where perfect love casts out fear. He would not open his heart and allow God to reveal his fatherhood there. Why was this? When we see the young man whom Jesus loved walk away unblessed, we wonder how he could leave the Master without a blessing. And when we see the prophet stopping short of Jehovah's smile and love, we ask the reason why.

Ah! there was another god than Jehovah to whom he rendered the heartiest worship. The idol's name was Balaam. This was the image to whose shrine the prophet brought the costliest offerings he could grasp—to which he asked the multitude to bow. Gold in itself was worthless. The prophet would have spurned the nuggets from his path; but if gold will adorn the idol, and make it more attractive, he would almost die to gain it. Honor, whether it was borne in stately triumph from the palace, or rewarded the adoring crowd, was an object of contempt. But if it will encircle the idol's brow—if it will cause more people to look at it with greater awe—he would leave no means untried to obtain it. Balaam worshiped himself. This is the key to the nature of that strange and solitary life. On the one hand, he feared God so intensely that he dare not disobey him. He saw that the hand which opened the sea was able to smite him dead; and not even life itself could make him disobey the God of Israel. On the other hand, man-worship, as seen in the craving for gold and honor as a means to an end, caused the prophet to seek them as much as he dare. And these two passions—terrible fear of God and an insatiable lust of worship—somewhat checked by that fear existing in the same breast, worked out that strange and awful life.

What Do You Live For?

Suppose we were to put the above question to a little child—likely it would reply: "I live for mamma—to be mamma's baby." A sweet answer. It could only make it sweeter by saying: "I live to be Jesus' baby."

Suppose we come to a little boy with the same question: What do you live for? "O I see many things to live for. Here is my ball and bat, and I like to play with my marbles, and a great many other things."

We come to the gay youth and ask: What do you live for? "O there are hundreds of things I live for. I like to ride my pony, I like to fish and hunt, and in a few more years I will be a man, and time will only tell what I will do then."

We come to the young man. He has perhaps just married and settled down for life. His prospects are good—everything looks bright and encouraging; therefore he promises himself a long life of happiness.

Next we come to the middle-aged man. His joys of life are partly over, yet he promises himself happiness in the future.

Next we come to the aged man. He has lived for the world all his life, and when you put such a question to him he hardly knows what to give for an answer.

Next we come to the Christian pilgrim and ask: What do you live for? "I live for Jesus," is the reply. "I find there is nothing in this world but vanity of vanities. I know my stay is short here; therefore I am endeavoring to live for Jesus."

All have something to live for—all find some way of employing their short stay in this world. But, alas, how few are living for God! How few of the vast multitudes living on this earth are living for God! How few of those that name the name of Christ, and are members of the church, that really follow Jesus! They all wish to get to heaven; they could hardly bear the idea of being sent to everlasting punishment after death; yet they are not willing to deny themselves, take up their cross and follow Jesus. God plainly says we shall come out from the world and be separate. We must be different from the world. As long as we are like the world we are not journeying heavenward. It is not enough to be as good as our neighbor. Our neighbor may be pious, he may be trying to live religiously, yet he can make mistakes; and shall we do the same, because he happens to do so? Christ is our example; follow him.

If you ask one of the characters just named if he is really happy, he could hardly give a satisfactory answer. If we would only sit down and think how fast time is passing away, and that every day is bringing us nearer our destination, many would be convinced of the importance of improving our present opportunities. Time cannot pass too fast for the Christian—every day brings him nearer his home. There is no solid happiness without God. The future promises much, but you receive but little of it. Wealth makes many fair promises, but never fulfills them. Wisdom, wealth and honor can never give real happiness without God. Our bread never tastes so sweet as when the blessing of God rests upon it. Our troubles and afflictions are never so light as when God sustains us.

Labor is rest and pain is sweet
If thou, my God, art here

O that there were more that would decide to live religiously, and would carry out their decision. C.

BRITISH HONDURAS.

A HIGHLANDER who sold brooms went into a barber's shop in Glasgow to get shaved. The barber bought one of his brooms, and, after having shaved him, asked the price of it. "Tippence," said the Highlander. "No, no," said the shaver; "I'll give you a penny, and if that does not satisfy you take your broom again." The Highlander took it, and asked what he had to pay. "A penny," says Strap. "I'll gie ye a bawbee," says Duncan, "and if that dinna satisfy ye, pit on my beard again."

A COUNTRY preacher, holding forth one very sultry day in a small hall, was much annoyed by those who kept dropping in after the service had commenced, invariably closing the door after them. He bore the vexation with Job-like patience; but at length, being fairly exhausted by the extreme oppressiveness of the heat, he vociferated to an offender: "Friend, do, for goodness' sake, let that door be open. I believe if I was preaching in a bottle you would put the cork in."

A MODERN philosopher thinks it a mistake to suppose that women have stronger attachments than men. "A man," he says, "is often attached to an old hat, but who ever heard of a woman being attached to an old bonnet?"

The Shakers in Convention.

The Episcopalians have their conventions, the Presbyterians their assemblies and synods, the Methodists their conferences, the Baptists their associations; and why should the Shakers not convene? And why should they not invite the public, even at a quarter of a dollar a head per session?

Both men and women took part in the speech-making. The men were dressed in home-spun gray, and the women in dresses of what seemed to be domestic manufacture, dyed like imperfectly purpled Easter eggs. Around their shoulders they wore talmas of white woolen goods, and their heads were adorned with neat and closely-fitting caps. Before coming to the platform they removed their straw bonnets. These pieces of head-gear had an airy look for November, and attracted much attention as the women wore them along the street. The services were opened by singing.

To give a detailed account of the speeches would be as profitless as it would be wearisome to the reader. Suffice it to say, that they were a compound of incongruous misunderstanding of Scripture, with the most bigoted self-righteousness, and the assumption of the possession of the only system of truth worth having. Considering that there is only a handful of Shakers in all Christendom, this assumption is as odd as their adherence to their queer style of clothes.

If the Roman Catholics err in giving the Virgin Mary an undue prominence, much more do these curious people go astray about Ann Lee. They put this strange feminine genius closely alongside of Jesus Christ, asserting that God is dual, and that a motherhood as well as a fatherhood is needed—a female Savior as well as a male Savior. They repudiate to a great extent the divinity of Jesus Christ. They say, however, that he was a most excellent man, forgetting that if he was not divine he could not be a most excellent man, but would, on the other hand, be an atrocious liar, having proclaimed himself as distinctly as he did to be both God and man, and one with God the Father. The way in which they twist the Book of Revelation to accord with their views of the woman in the wilderness, Mother Ann Lee, is, to say the best of it, absurd.

As these Shakers make such boast of the healthfulness and excellent physiological character of the lives they lead, one would naturally expect to see in them finely-developed samples of physical beauty and strength. But, with one exception, they are lank as crows, and unlovely as owls to look upon. That one exception is a benevolent-faced elderess who has been over fifty years a Shaker. She is round and jolly, and the very picture of good nature. Perhaps she would not take it as a compliment if we say that she has a motherly look; but that is exactly it. She is too good-looking to be a Shakeress elderess. It was amusing to hear this good old soul denounce Christian women for their adherence to fashion, while she and her sisters on the stage behind her were accurately following, with mere implicit obedience than any devotee of modern fashion-plates, the stern edict of Shakerian fashion which prescribes for its votaries such remarkable garments as were displayed to public gaze by the participants in this convention.

The fact that the Shakers are not making many converts is an exceedingly pleasant one to contemplate. A few people who have unhappy homes, or who have been crossed in their love affairs, may, from time to time, adopting Ann Lee's idea of "going into the wilderness," join themselves with the Shakers. But the barren, homeless, starved thing which they call their "higher life" has no such attractions for men or women of ordinary sense and with ordinary human affections. Yet they seem to enjoy it in their uncomfortable fashion. They are truly thrifty in their business affairs. They eschew tobacco, pork, gin and quack medicines. But their religion seems to us to be the worst kind of quackery.—Christian at Work.

THE COLISEUM.—A correspondent of the London Times has written a singularly interesting account of what may fairly be called the disinterment of the Coliseum, now proceeding under the direction of Signor Rosa; and the picture it presents of the engineering ingenuity, as well as architectural splendor, which the Romans devoted to their truculent sports is rather awful. The excavations have now laid bare part of the arena, which is proved to have been a solid floor, paved with herring-bone work, and not a movable platform. Upon the arena converged a number of large tunnel-shaped corridors having a series of lateral chambers vast enough to accommodate scores of animals, and with an adjustment of gates such that, without danger to the keepers, even the hundred lions, recorded by Vopiscus, having bounded on its floor together, might be shown to the eighty-seven thousand lords of creation in the amphitheater. A magnificent corridor, not yet perfectly cleared out, having evidently no lateral galleries, doubtless represents the passage through which the gladiator emerged to his duel, and the martyr to his cross. Through it too, it would seem, were removed the slaughtered corpses and carcasses, while the applause of the audience and the bellowing of the other beasts waiting for their gates to swing round must have made terrible harmonies.

TRADE between Europe and the Argentine Republic has largely developed of late years, and there also exists a considerable emigration thither. About 2,100 vessels, with an aggregate of 800,000 tons, visit its ports in the course of the year, the number of those which clear averaging about the same. Buenos Ayres itself receives 300 steamers of an aggregate burden of 250,000 tons.

HE who can conceal his joys is greater than he who can hide his griefs.

Obituaries.

LITTLE CLARA, daughter of S. S. and E. J. Carnes, of Cold Springs, Texas, died on the nineteenth of October, aged two years, three months and [illegible] days. Her innocence and gentleness were never more beautifully expressed than in the countenance of this sweet little lamb, which the great Shepherd has taken to his own bosom to shelter from the rude winds and adverse fortunes of earth. A FRIEND.

MRS. MARGARET N. NEW, daughter of Dr. Rush Nutt, deceased, of Jefferson county, Mississippi, and wife of Dr. C. B. New, of Pass Christian, died, after a few days' illness, of pneumonia, on Sunday morning, November 29, 1874, aged forty-four years. Her birth-place was Laurel Hill, near the town of Rodney. Her father was one of the early settlers of the county, and one of the original founders of Oakland College. Trained in the ways of piety, she early became a follower of Jesus, and attached herself to the Presbyterian Church. She loved the church of God, and all the followers of Jesus.

Hers was not a demonstrative nature, in consequence of which but few knew how deep her feelings, and how gushing with tenderness was her regard for the cause and the people of God. She loved, above all others, the church of her choice; but her arms of benevolence were wide-extended. She ever longed and prayed for a deeper work of grace. For years she was the child of affliction, but the writer has never heard of her murmuring at the dispensations of Providence. She never attempted to make any show of her attainments in temporal knowledge or in the divine life. She preferred to be "little and unknown, loved and prized by God alone." Home was the only place this side heaven where were centered her fondest hopes and choicest affections. Truthfulness and devotion in her were pre-eminent, and the radiant point of duty her aim. A devoted husband and children, and other relatives and friends, are left to mourn her loss. Not only they, but the church and society mourn—more especially the poor—but not as those without hope. "They that are dead in Christ shall rise first." May our Father sanctify to us all this bereavement.

BROTHER.

DIED, of dropsy of the heart, at his residence near Yazoo City, WILLIAM B. SMITH, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. Father Smith was born September 15, 1797, in Claiborne county, Mississippi. When he was five or six years old his father died, leaving a widow, with three children—one son and two daughters—to mourn his loss. William, the eldest of his children, grew up to manhood in his native county without any education or religious training. At the age of twenty-three years he married into a Methodist family, his wife's sister, Nancy Johnson, being a member of the church. He, however, had but little concern about religion until after his removal from Claiborne to Yazoo county, in 1830. In 1832 he joined the church as a seeker of religion; and in 1834 he experienced regenerating grace, and set to his seal "that God was true, and that God is love." From that time to the time of his death he was faithful in the discharge of all his religious duties. He was appointed class-leader, and served the church in that position as long as he lived.

I became acquainted with Father Smith in 1852, and married his eldest living daughter on the third of January, 1853, and lived near him for more than twenty years. I have known him long and I have known him well. He was always found where duty called him. He was suddenly taken ill, on the night of the eighteenth of September, with asthmatic affections. So difficult was it for him to breathe that he was unable to lie on his bed. I visited him on the twenty-first. He informed me that he had examined his religious life, and said that "all was well." Every time that either myself or my wife visited him he said "his way was clear." In this condition he remained until the ninth of October, when he fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, aged seventy-seven years and twenty-four days. In the death of Father Smith our neighborhood has lost one of its best citizens, and the church one of its most zealous and useful members. While we mourn the loss of Father Smith, we comfort ourselves with the reflection that our loss is his eternal gain.

L. D. LANGFORD.

NANCY ELEANOR GOFF was the daughter of Joseph H. and Nancy Beardslee. She was born December 22, 1829, in Jackson county, Mississippi. She was married to Moses Goff, March 20, 1856. She was born again, at Salem camp meeting, in October, 1856, and there united with the church of God.

From the time of her conversion she maintained a consistent Christian life, both in conduct and in temper, filling the place of wife as a Christian woman only can—affectionately obedient, honoring her husband. She was the mother of four daughters, whom she taught to fear God. As a member of the church she was regular in her attendance upon all its public and social meetings; and if she was not always happy in God, she was trustful and hopeful.

She died of yellow fever, at Moss Point, Mississippi, October 16, 1874. Her illness was short, her mind tranquil, her end peace. Her loss is severely felt by her husband, two remaining daughters and the community.

ELOISE ELIZABETH GOFF, daughter of Moses and Nancy E. Goff, was born in Jackson county, Mississippi, November 23, 1861. She lived in this world twelve years and eleven months, a lovely and beloved child. She was a light in the home of her childhood, and a diligent and successful student at school, and a favorite with her teacher. As a Sunday school scholar she was regular in attendance, preparing her lessons with care; obliging to everybody, troublesome to none. She died of yellow fever, at Moss Point, October 23, 1874.

JULIA FRANCES GOFF, youngest daughter of Moses and N. E. Goff, was born in Jackson county, Mississippi, September 8, 1866, and lived [illegible] days. She died of yellow fever on the morning of the sixteenth of October, 1874, a few hours before the death of her mother. This lovely child was the first taken. Perhaps she was the purest of the family, and therefore she led the way to the world of sinless joy. Three (just half the family) were taken in one week; but it was a Christian family, and they sorrow not as those without hope.

THEODORE ALICE, daughter of Theodore W. and Julia Howze, and granddaughter of J. H. Beardslee, died of yellow fever, October 18, 1874, at Moss Point, aged four years and seven months. Alice was a member of our Sunday school. Her little feet were taught the way to the house of God on earth—her spirit is now in heaven above. B. JONES.

LYDIA JANE HOLMES, daughter of William and Mary Holmes, was born in the city of Sheffield, England, on the tenth of June, 1822. She came to America in November, 1837, and was married to Mr. J. R. Taylor, of New Orleans, August, 1845. She was left a widow in August, 1849. Soon after the death of her husband she was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at a protracted meeting in the town of Dayton, Alabama, held by Rev. E. J. Hammill, of the Alabama Conference. She was raised in the Church of England, but had never experienced a change of heart. On the twenty-ninth of November, 1850, she was married to the writer of this, then a member of the Alabama Conference. For eight years she with him sustained the crosses and endured the afflictions incident to the itinerant's life. She was a woman of great candor and plainness of speech—never shrunk from any duty. She was prompt to encourage the desponding, and sympathetic toward the afflicted. As a wife she was all that a husband could desire—conscientious in all she did or said. Her motto was a clean heart first, then all outward things to correspond thereto. In the relation of stepmother she had no superior. To this her husband, and his son, whom she raised from the age of six years to manhood, can testify. No sacrifice was too great for her to make for his moral and mental advancement, often yielding her own comfort for his sake.

For more than twenty years she was greatly afflicted, during which time she was often confined to bed and expected to die. On these occasions she was calm, cheerful and resigned to the will of God. During the past three years her health and strength failed more rapidly. On the tenth of February last she became much worse. She was attacked with neuralgia and rheumatism, and for seven months and ten days she suffered the most intense agony, often so intense that she would shriek aloud. During this long and painful illness I and others often conversed with her on the subject of death. She did not at all times feel entirely resigned to death, yet she never seemed to doubt her acceptance with God. Often in her sleep she would be singing parts of hymns and songs, such as "I never can forget the day when Jesus took my sins away;" "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand;" "There is a land of pure delight."

On the morning of the twentieth she was quite calm in mind, and seemed to suffer less pain. At noon she ate more than usual, and said she felt better. She requested me to read for her. I did so for some time, then laid down the book, and remarked that I would step into the next room for awhile. She asked: "Will I ever see you again?" I saw her mind was wandering, and replied: "I will soon return." She smiled and said: "All right." In about five minutes I returned to her bedside. I saw that a great change had taken place. The eyes, which had for months appeared dull and heavy, were now flashing with all the brilliancy and fire of youth. She was looking upward, with a smile on her countenance. I asked what she saw. She said: "I do not know what it is, but something beautiful. O how beautiful!" After remaining silent for a short time I said: "Is it an angel?" She said: "I do not know, but think it is." I then asked her if she did not think that she would soon be with the angels in heaven. She replied: "I sometimes think so, and then again think I will get better." I replied: "My dear, you are very near your endless rest. Are you ready and willing to go?" "Then, taking me by the hand and fixing her eyes on mine, she replied: "Yes, yes, yes. This world is now too poor for me. Could I live a thousand years and enjoy the most perfect health, and possess all the wealth of this world, with its honors, pleasures and powers, it would be better for me to die and go to heaven, where there are riches, honors, powers, pleasures and everlasting life, than to remain on earth."

At fifteen minutes after three o'clock A. M. on the twenty-first of September, 1874, the spirit returned to God, who gave it. Rev. J. O. Andrew, our excellent pastor, and Rev. J. N. Lewis, of the Presbyterian Church, performed the funeral service in the Methodist church in Milton, Florida.

While we are sad and lonely, even in the midst of society, and surrounded by kind friends, we can rejoice that another Christian has escaped to the mansions in the sky. She is gone not to prepare a mansion, but to enter one ready prepared; gone to wear a crown already won—she only receives it from the Captain of her salvation.

MOTHER'S WAY.

On within our little cottage,
As the shadows gently fall,
While the sunlight touches softly
One sweet face upon the wall,
Do we gather close together,
And in hushed and tender tone,
Ask each other's full forgiveness
For the wrong that each has done.
Should you wonder why this custom
At the ending of the day,
Eye and voice would quickly answer:
"It was once our mother's way!"

If our home be bright and cheery,
If it hold a welcome true,
Opening wide its door of greeting
To the many, not the few;
If we share our Father's bounty
With the needy, day by day,
'Tis because our hearts remember
This was ever mother's way.

Sometimes, when our hands grow weary,
Or our tasks seem very long,
When our burdens look too heavy,
And we deem the right all wrong,
Then we gain a new, fresh courage
As we rise to proudly say:
"Let us do our duty bravely;
This was our dear mother's way."

Thus we keep her memory precious,
While we never cease to pray
That at last when lengthening shadows
Mark the evening of our day,
They may find us waiting calmly
To go home our mother's way!

Hearth and Home.

The Wives of Welnsburg.

As long ago as the year 1141 a prince called "Henry the Proud," Duke of Bavaria and Saxony, was besieged in his strongly fortified town of Welnsburg by a powerful enemy, Conrad the Third, Emperor of Germany.

The duke and his brave soldiers made a long and gallant resistance, and killed so many of the Emperor's best soldiers, and repulsed so many of his brilliant attacks, that he was enraged to the savage point of threatening to destroy the whole town and to slaughter all the inhabitants, surrender or no surrender.

At length the Welnsburgers found that they could hold out but a short time longer. They also had lost many men; their ammunition was running low, and their provisions lower; in short, they were at the point of starvation and utter despair.

The wise old men met daily in club-rooms and beer gardens, and counseled together, and smoked over the sad state of public affairs. The priests said masses and walked in solemn processions through the streets, chanting and burning incense; good old ladies got cramps and rheumatism by much kneeling in prayer on the damp stones of chapel floors; but as the Emperor's people were praying against them, to the same saints, nothing came of it. The archers and slingers fought on, from the already crumbling walls, obstinately but vainly. If there had been any editors of daily papers in Welnsburg to criticise military operations, things might have gone differently; as it was, all was of no avail, and every hour brought their dreadful doom nearer.

But often in this world, when the valor and wisdom of men fail, the wit and devotion of women open a way of deliverance. It was so in Welnsburg.

A clever young woman who, if she had lived in our time, would probably have been a great reformer, and a woman's rights lecturer, called together all the chief women of the town to consider their critical situation. They kept out the newspaper reporters, and deliberated and planned with closed doors. The duchess was probably in the chair. I doubt if they had any secretary, as in that day no woman knew how to write, and not even the alphabet had been suffered to come into families to make discord and division. So no written record of the discussions and resolutions of this convention have come down to us—only the fact that it resulted in the appointment of an embassy, of the most respectable and beautiful of their number, to wait on the Emperor Conrad, and intercede for the doomed stronghold.

They went forth early the next morning, dressed in mourning, but very carefully and becomingly, and walking in a solemn and stately way, each with a rosary at her side.

To the great Emperor's tent they came, and knelt in a semicircle before him, with clasped hands and tearful eyes, and entreated him to show mercy.

The young woman who had formed this plan for besieging the Imperial heart spoke for the rest, and I assure you she talked to his majesty in a way to impress and astonish him. She was "as solemn as a priest and as cunning as a lawyer," he said. But he had never heard Julia Ward Howe and Lucy Stone. He could not wholly resist her eloquence and her logic, but he was still very angry with the Welnsburgers for the trouble they had given him in not submitting sooner—keeping him so long from the chase, and from more profitable war enterprises; and the best terms these brave dames could make with him were that they and all their fellow-townswomen should be allowed to march out of the besieged place in safety, and to go where they pleased, carrying with them so much of their treasures and most valuable possessions as they could bear on their backs. As for the men of the castle and town, from Duke Henry down to the lowest craftsman, not one should be spared! The obstinate fools deserve death, and they should have it! The Emperor swore this with a great oath, and a stamp of his mailed foot that made all ring about him. The poor women were about to cry out in remonstrance, but their wise leader gave them a significant look, and, humbly bowing their sad heads, they backed out of the royal presence, and slowly returned to the besieged town.

After a few hours the gates of Welnsburg were again swung open, and the great procession of its women began to file through. They were headed by the duchess herself, in her richest robes and jewels. They all wore their best clothes and ornaments. Each woman was seen bending under a heavy sack—so heavy and of so peculiar a shape that as they passed over the drawbridge, down the hill, and reached the camp of the besiegers, which they had to go through, the Emperor suspected a trick, and ordered a halt, that this sack business might be looked into. The duchess had to deposit her huge sack at his feet, and with it dropped her husband, Henry the Proud—for "pride must have a fall." In every sack was found a man!—the brave Welnsburg women declaring that their husbands, fathers, brothers or lovers were their greatest earthly treasures.

Not a full-grown man had been left in all Welnsburg. This was in the happy time when the number of men and women was about equal on the earth. Every wife carried her husband—we will hope, quite willingly—for this was in the time when husbands were well worth saving—men valiant and true; and not a young woman was there in all the town so uncomely that she could not on that day find a lover ready to be sacked.

It was a strange and ludicrous sight when they were all let down and let out, and stood awaiting the decision of the conqueror.

Some of the Emperor's most bloody-minded warriors urged him to recall the rash promise he had made to those strong-minded and strong-backed women of Welnsburg; but he frowned on them, and replied: "An emperor keeps his word."

You see he was one of the old-fashioned kind of emperors. He did not stop there, for he was in capital good humor, and, being a married man himself, felt that such wifely devotion was a good thing, and ought to be encouraged. He pardoned all the Welnsburgers on the spot; and he gave that night a great ball, in the duke's castle, and lavished the duke's beer and wine, and danced with the duchess and with all the prettiest dames, who in the embassy to his camp had softened his gallant heart, and wrought out final deliverance for Welnsburg.

A great German poet says: "Tell me the way to Welnsburg, for when I marry I want a Welnsburg girl."

I do not know, but I very much doubt whether the poet, should he make a pilgrimage to that famous town, would find any girls of the old sort left—any women anywhere so strong in devotion, muscle and backbone.—Grace Greenwood's Famous Ballad Stories.

The "Yarn About Galileo."

It would seem that the Romish clergy of this city, as far as they are represented by the poetic theologian of the Star, are in a very heretical frame of mind.

We have for their benefit taken the trouble to print the sentence of the Inquisition, acting in the name of the Pope, compelling Galileo to abjure and curse the ridiculous notion that the world has a daily rotation. We have also published the abject and complete abjuration made by Galileo. We have referred to the decrees of the Congregation of the Index, cursing and forbidding the same theory, as advocated in the books of Copernicus and Galileo. Yet in spite of this it seems that these reverend gentlemen intimate that they will continue to believe that the world turns round, although the infallible Pope personally, and through his official mouthpieces, has declared this doctrine contrary to Scripture, contrary to philosophy, and contrary to the faith of the Holy Roman Church. We are surprised at the obstinacy, the contumacy of these reverend gentlemen. Will they take the risk of believing this terrible doctrine after the Pope has forbidden it? It is well for them that there is no Inquisition here, or we should be compelled to report them, and in that case their heresy would stand a good chance of getting a scorching.

If, however, these writers know half as much as they pretend to know of the history and practices of their church, the question becomes more serious. Every one, in that case, needs to know what they mean by these persistent and unscrupulous attempts to deceive the public by corrupting the truth of history.

We accept the issue which they have so vauntingly made. They declare to this community that the whole story about Galileo being compelled to tell a lie by the so-called infallible church is "a barefaced falsehood."

We therefore have produced the sentence of the Inquisition, which declares that Galileo taught the false doctrine that the earth revolves, according to the theory of Copernicus; that this doctrine, at the desire of the Pope, was defined to be false; that the Pope declared it to be false, and contrary to Scripture; that the Inquisition denounced it as an error and a heresy, and compelled Galileo to "curse, abjure and detest it" as "an error and a heresy," which he did, knowing, of course, that he was perjuring himself. The translation of this humiliating document we also published.

"The substance of the whole accusation of the Presbyterian is that the Pope, and therefore the church, condemned the doctrine. They have not as yet given a shadow of proof thereof. The decree of an inferior board of censors, or even the formal decree of Inquisitors general, though at the request of the Pope, is not a dogmatic decision of the church, and the Presbyterian knows that perfectly well."

Nothing is easier than to show that this was an official act, with the approval of the Pope, and designed to be binding on the whole Romish Church.

The Inquisition was inaugurated by the Popes as early as the thirteenth century. The Fourth Lateran Council, in 1215, indorsed measures leading to the institution of courts for suppressing heresy, so-called; we have formerly given some notice of these courts as described by the canon law. A supreme tribunal of Inquisition was established by Paul the Third in 1543. It was enlarged by Sixtus the Fifth, called the Congregation of the Holy Office, and organized with twelve cardinals, and consultors and qualifiers to prepare cases for trial, and the case presented by the qualifiers, when accepted, was the action of the Inquisition.

It was this congregation which compelled Galileo to recant, abjure and curse the heresy that "the earth moves." As the superscription of their decrees reads, they are:

The Congregation of the Holy Office, for suppressing heresy, the congregation for the whole church throughout the world, the congregation especially deputed for this purpose by the Pope himself. This jurisdiction they have claimed and exercised for more than three hundred years. In Galileo's case the first meeting, as his sentence tells us, was held in the presence of the Pope himself. And his abjuration was ordered to be publicly read at the universities.

In addition to the condemnation by the Pope, and by the decree of the Inquisition appointed to take official cognizance of heresy, Galileo's heresy that "the world moves" was condemned by the Congregation of the Index.

The Council of Trent appointed a commission to prepare a list of books to be prohibited; and Pope Paul the Fourth ratified the list. The Congregation of the Index was instituted by Paul the Fifth to ascertain and prohibit all books containing pernicious doctrines. We have before us an authentic copy of their decree of March 5, 1616, condemning the writings of Copernicus which teach that "the world moves." We have also before us an authentic copy of their decree of August 23, 1634, condemning the Dialogue of Galileo, containing the same heresy, that "the world moves."

These decrees are addressed to the church throughout the world, and every one is forbidden to read or even possess the prohibited book.

This congregation has also claimed and exercised jurisdiction throughout that church for three hundred years. It is the official organ of the Romish Church in such matters. And if there could be any doubt whether their action in the case of Galileo was approved or indorsed by papal authority, such doubt can have nothing to sustain it when it is shown that these very sentences and claims of jurisdiction were republished for many years afterward. The copy of the Index Librorum Prohibitorum, now before us, contains all the facts and decrees we have cited. It was published at Rome in 1670, by order of Pope Alexander the Seventh.

Such are the facts, and they can easily be verified. We place them in contrast with the assertion quoted above, and leave the reader to draw his own conclusions. In their anxious zeal to secure political influence it has become so common for Romish editors in England and in this country to seek to mislead and deceive the public by systematic and deliberate falsehood, that perhaps an exposure of this kind may be of service both to them and the community. Let our people reflect, and consider whether these are leaders fit to be trusted!—Southwestern Presbyterian.

How He Stopped Chewing.

Smikes made up his mind to stop chewing. He never was much of a chewer anyhow, he said. He had used tobacco but for a few years, and rarely consumed more than an ounce paper in a day, but he feared the habit might get hold of him and become fixed, and if there was anything he abhorred it was to see a man become a slave to a bad habit. He had used the weed some, to be sure, but there had never been a time during the last ten years when he could not stop at any moment. But so long as he did not become habituated to its use, he did not care to stop. He could break it off at any moment, and it was a great satisfaction to feel so.

Thompson, he thought, was an abject slave to his pipe. He pitied Thompson, for he had seen Thompson try to stop, and fail ignominiously every time he undertook it. But Smikes wanted to show his wife how easily he could quit. So on Monday morning he remarked carelessly to Samantha that he guessed he would stop using tobacco. Samantha said she was glad of it, and added impetuously what she had never said before—that it was a vile habit. Smikes appeared a little nervous and confused when Samantha said this, and mumbled out something about being glad he had never got into it himself. In his agitation he pulled out his tobacco box and was about to take a chew, when he recollected himself and plunged out of the door, forgetting his umbrella.

About half way to the office he met Jones, with whom he was having some business transactions. While they were talking the thing over Smikes got a little enthusiastic, and he had almost reached the office before he noticed that he was rolling an uncommonly plump quid around his mouth like a sweet morsel. How it got there Smikes did not know. He puzzled over that little thing all the rest of the forenoon, and at last he took it out of his mouth and threw it away, satisfied that he must have taken it while talking with Jones. Twice that afternoon Smikes took out his tobacco box and looked at it. Once he took off the cover and smelled of the tobacco. It smelt so good that Smikes felt impelled to remark that it was not the easiest thing in the world to stop chewing.

The sixth day Smikes felt like a murderer. He seemed to himself to have become transferred into a Modoc. His mouth was dry and parched. A stout, healthy-looking gentleman came into Smikes' office that day. He was a great friend of Smikes, and he brought forth his silver tobacco box, and daintily shook out a small portion of the pungent weed. Smikes felt his mouth water. He remarked to Mr. Johnson that he had not chewed any for six days, and that he had refrained so long just to satisfy himself that anybody could chew or leave it alone. He was fully satisfied that it could be done, but he rather thought that his was one of those temperaments that are really acted upon in a beneficial way by the temperate use of tobacco.

Mr. Johnson said he thought so too; and, as he handed Smikes his tobacco box, remarked that he had chewed regular for thirty years, and didn't know as it had ever damaged him any. As Smikes rolled a large quid back into his left cheek he said he thought there was a great difference in men. He was satisfied that he could stop chewing at any moment, but there were some temperaments to which a gentle narcotic or opiate was really a blessing.

He congratulated himself again and again and again, that day, that he did not become entangled in the meshes of the filthy vice, and he alluded to the matter three or four times that evening at the tea-table, till Samantha marveled greatly at the firmness of Smikes. She had always heard, she said, that it was a hard thing to leave off. But Smikes had told her, and kept telling her, that it was "just as easy," and her reverence for the virile strength and independence of character of Smikes grew like a gourd. That night Smikes had the nightmare. He thought that a legion of foul fiends had got him up in the corner of the back yard, and had rolled upon his belly a monstrous quid of "fine cut" as large around as a cart-wheel, and that they were trying to force it into his mouth.

Smikes struggled vigorously, and when Samantha shook him and asked him what was the matter, his only reply was that "anybody could stop chewing if they only make up their mind to it." The next day Smikes was a little nervous. He told everybody who came in what a simple thing it was to stop chewing. The third day he harped about it all day long. He told one man about it three different times, and when that much-informed individual ventured the opinion that he would be chewing again in less than a week, Smikes indignantly ejaculated: "Mr. Jenkins, when I make up my mind to a thing, that is the last of it."

The fourteenth day Smikes heard that chamomile blossoms were sometimes used as a substitute for tobacco, and just out of curiosity he devoured a couple of ounces of them. He said to the druggist when he bought them that it was easy enough to stop the use of tobacco. On the fifteenth day Smikes got sick. His nerves gave out. He snapped something at Samantha at the breakfast-table, upset his inkstand, burnt his fingers poking some cinders out of the grate, and had no appetite for dinner. That day the devil whispered to Smikes that tobacco was really beneficial to some temperaments. Smikes had a temperament of that kind.

SOME OLD DUTCH PROVERBS.—We must row with the oars we have; and as we cannot order the wind, we are obliged to sail with the wind that God gives.

Patience and attention will bring us far. If a cat watches long enough at the mouse's nest, the mouse shall not escape.

Perseverance will obtain good cabbage and lettuce where otherwise nothing but thistles will grow.

The plowman must go up and down, and whatever else may be alone, there is no other but this long way to do the work well.

Learn to sleep with one eye open. As soon as the chicken goes to roost it is a good time for the fox.

Fools always will ask what time it is, but the wise know their time.

Grind while the wind is fair, and if you neglect, do not complain of God's providence.

God gives food to every bird, but he does not bring it to the nest; in like manner he gives us our daily bread, but by means of our daily work.

The dawn of day has gold in its mouth.

He that lags behind in a road where many are driving always will be in a cloud of dust.

Never set your feet in a dirty and crooked path for the love of money. It is a work that will bring bad interest if you wish to suck honey of thistles.

You will need a long spoon if you wish to eat with the devil out of the same dish.

A SCOTSMAN is always afraid of expressing unqualified praise. If you remark that "it's a good day," the usual reply is: "Atweel, sir, I've seen waur." If you say his wife is an excellent woman, he returns: "She's no a bad body." A buxom lass, smartly dressed, is: "No sae very unpurpose like." The richest and rarest viands are: "No bad." A man noted for his benevolence is: "No the warst man i' the world." And should anybody make a remark, however novel, that squares with a Scotsman's ideas, he will at once say: "That's what I've often thocht!"

A NEW LUXURY.—The latest luxury, says a London paper, is caves. "In order to establish a reputation for wealth nowadays it is necessary to be the owner of a cave. A mansion is all very well, but the possession of a cave immediately stamps the owner as a person of importance." Some of the caves at Brighton are richly furnished and lighted with gas, and made the center of costly and lavish hospitalities.

BAUDRY, the decorator of the new opera house in Paris, was sadly bothered for an idea by which to represent the "music of England" emblematically in his frescoes. He painted finally three little genii. One carried the Irish harp, the other the Scotch bagpipe, and the third paid the two first for playing, and tried to look as if he understood the music.

AS STORM following storm, and wave succeeding wave, give additional hardness to the shell that incloses the pearl, so do the storms and waves of life add force to the character of man.

Religious Intelligence.

REV. A. B. EARLE, the evangelist, has been in Nova Scotia, and is now in New York State.

THE Nouveau Monde says that the corporation of the city of Montreal has imposed a tax of four per cent. on all churches. The Monde denounces the tax.

SEVERAL families at Lublin, Russia, have been banished to the interior because they opposed the reforms recently introduced into the Russian Church.

THE Methodist Dr. Gibson is put down as reporting a Methodist Chinese Young Men's Christian Association in San Francisco, numbering 400 members.

THE committees appointed by the Presbyterian Churches, North and South, to consult concerning the establishment of fraternal relations, will meet for this purpose in Baltimore, January 7.

THERE have been hitherto four distinct Presbyterian bodies in Canada, the union of which is now almost an accomplished fact. The process of combination has been a slow and delicate one.

THERE has been an awakening among the members of the Greek Church in the Lebanon region, Syria, and many have declared themselves Protestants, and have called for religious teachers.

THERE are now 54 missionaries stationed in Sweden alone, and the membership, including probationers, numbers 4,633. There are also 22 churches and one parsonage. Value of church property, $29,600.

AN EXCELLENT and evangelical pastoral has been issued by Mar Athanasius, the patriarch of the Syrian Church in India, who heartily approves of the revival which has recently taken place among his people.

THE only church where sermons are preached in the Irish language in this country is, it is said, at Elmira, Illinois. A priest from Canada preaches a sermon in English, and, after a short intermission, repeats it in Irish.

THE inhabitants of the Canton of Soleure, Switzerland, have, by a vote of 8,356 to 5,890, supported the decision of the Grand Council, suppressing the convents of Mariastein and the chapters of St. Urs and St. Leodegard.

THE receipts of the American Board during the month of August were very large, amounting to $87,955. Through this welcome assistance during the last month of the fiscal year the deficit was reduced to $4,000, or, including the debt of the previous year, to $30,000.

A YEAR AGO the Hanson Place Baptist church, Brooklyn, in which Dr. Fulton preaches, was enlarged so as to seat nearly 2,000 persons; but 550 is now a good congregation by actual count. The Lee Avenue and Marcy Avenue churches, open-communion, with seats altogether for nearly 2,200 persons, are regularly crowded.

THE Roman Catholic Church loses another of its priests in the person of Father Francis Xavier Jacquemet, who, having originally been a Presbyterian, now returns to the faith of his fathers. He has been attending Dr. Leyburn's church in Baltimore, in which he lately publicly renounced his vows as a Roman Catholic priest, and made profession of his faith as a Presbyterian.

DURING the past month the Presbyterian Board of Education at Philadelphia has received 217 candidates for the ministry. This shows a disposition to keep up the supply, notwithstanding that there are in this church several hundred ministers without employment, and that there are fifty or more candidates for the pulpit of every respectable church which becomes vacant.

ABYSSINIA does not appear to be any more open to missionaries than during the reign of Theodoro. The Rev. Mr. Flad, in the employ of the London Jewish Society, started in the autumn of last year with four Abyssinian pupils to labor in that country. He was permitted to enter the country, and was treated very kindly, but received from King John a polite note forbidding him to preach the gospel.

PRINCE HOHENLOHE, the German embassador at Paris, in a recent address at Kulmbach, said that the assertion frequently made that Prince Bismarck had not foreseen and prepared for the present conflict with the Roman Catholic Church was untrue. Bismarck, he said, addressed a circular of warning to the foreign powers so long ago as April, 1869. In their personal communications on the subject, Prince Hohenlohe had observed even then with what anxiety the prime minister watched the approach of the struggle between Church and State.

IT IS announced that Rev. Dr. Talmage, one of the Reformed missionaries in Japan, is in favor of making the native Christian churches entirely independent of the denominations which send out the missionaries, in order that the Japanese government may have no ground for the suspicion that its subjects, in becoming Christians, compromise their allegiance to it. This seems to be a very sensible ground to take, in view of the excessive jealousy the Japanese have of all foreign influence. The missionaries, says Dr. Talmage, should labor to Christianize the people, and constitute purely Japanese churches, not branches in Japan of English and American churches.

CHARLES MONTOUR, the chaplain of Napoleon the Third, who lost his situation on account of some trouble with Empress Eugenie, recently died at Vienna. He bequeathed 150,000 francs to Prince Napoleon, the Emperor's son; 150,000 francs to the Pope as Peter's pence; 1,000 francs to his housekeeper; 10,000 francs to her daughter, a likely girl of seventeen, on condition that she marries a Catholic; his furniture and library to the Franciscans; three valuable diamond rings to the monastery at Mariazell; and 10,000 francs for painting his portrait in life-size, which is to be placed in the church at Lourdes, France.

THE Wesleyan Missionary Notices for October contains a portrait of the late Rev. William Toose, the founder of the Wesleyan mission in France. He was a noble man, and accomplished a great and noble work. His memoir is just issued, introduced by the Rev. William Arthur. The Notices are rich in missionary intelligence. The present number brings cheering news from the Wesleyan mission in Continental India, from the Madras and Calcutta districts. In the Jaffna Singhalese districts the work is advancing. West Africa shows more hopeful signs; the native work on the Gold Coast is very active, and in Sierra Leone the schools are prospering finely. The Canadian missionaries have commenced a good work in Japan. The whole field of the Wesleyan missions is full of hope and encouragement.

THE "miracle" of the liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius, belief in which has been revived of late, took place at Naples, September 18. Business was suspended and the day kept as a holiday. St. Januarius, the patron saint of Naples, and a bishop of the early Christian church, was beheaded in the year 305. His body is said to have been brought to Naples about the year 400, and the relics purporting to be his lie buried in the cathedral. Two vials, containing a hard substance, claimed to be his blood, and a glass case inclosing his head, are exposed to public view on his festival day. When the head is brought near the vials the blood is seen to become liquid, bubble, rise, and fall again, the miracle sometimes lasting eight days. Various theories have been suggested by scientific men to explain the phenomenon. But it will come out some day.

IN a recent sermon in New York Bishop Cummins outlined the forces which march at his and Bishop Cheney's command; by means of which, together with some other sources, we are able to give our readers a fair idea of the present external strength of the Reformed Episcopal Church. Seven parishes are to be counted in New Brunswick, 5 in Illinois, 4 in New York, 4 in Pennsylvania, and enough others scattering to bring the total up to about 30. Nearly 40 clergymen are also enrolled. A late and very notable accession is that of a former Protestant Episcopal church at Victoria, British Columbia, with Dean Cridge, of the Church of England, at its head. The congregation in this instance numbers about 350. Rev. Edwin Potter has also been received from the Methodist Church. It should be understood that the Reformed Episcopal Church recognizes non-episcopal ordination, and therefore does not require reordination of accredited ministers coming from other denominations.

A MEETING of the American Missionary Society, which has for its special work the religious and secular education of the freedmen of the South, was held in Iowa a few weeks ago. The aggregate expenditure of the society last year was $344,004, of which $280,833 was in the South. Its receipts were $24,275 less than its expenditures. The remaining expenditure was for missionary work in Africa, the West Indies, Siam, the Sandwich Islands, and among the Indians. During the year it has organized 9 new churches, and there were 615 additions to the churches. The whole number of churches, schools and other institutions under the auspices of the association is as follows: Churches, 53; members, 3,177; ministers, missionaries and teachers, 273; chartered institutions, 7; higher and common schools, 30; normal schools, 1,392; grammar schools, 1,580; intermediate, 2,452; primary, 3,292; theological, 76; medical, 12; law, 15; collegiate preparatory, 231, and collegiate, 46, with a total number of 10,449 pupils. Besides these there are 1,521 Chinese pupils, and 9,039 pupils in church and mission Sunday schools.

HYGIENIC POWER OF THE SUN.—Sleepless people—and there are many in America—should court the sun. The very worst soporific is laudanum, and the very best is sunshine. Therefore it is very plain that poor sleepers should pass as many hours of the day in sunshine, and as few as possible in the shade. Many women are martyrs, and yet do not know it. They shut the sunshine out of their houses and hearts, they wear veils, they carry parasols, they do all that is possible to keep off the subtlest and yet most potent influence which is intended to give them strength and beauty and cheerfulness. Is it not time to change all this, and so get roses and color in our pale cheeks, strength in our weak backs, and courage in our timid souls? The women of America are pale and delicate; they may be blooming and strong, and the sunlight will be a potent influence in this transformation.—Boston Transcript.

SET the morning watch with care if you would be safe through the day; begin well if you would end well. Take care that the helm of the day is put right; look well to the point you want to sail to, then whether you make much progress or little, it will be so far in the right direction. The morning hour is generally the index of the day.—Spurgeon.

THE MISCHIEF-MAKER.—"Years entomb old quarrels; this is a merciful arrangement. The mischievous man is an explorer of these tombs. He opens the graves of old disputes, brings their ghostly skeletons up, and endeavors to put new life in them. He is a fiend that lives among the tombs."

OUR short-sighted eyes cannot see dangers; or, seeing them, are appalled. There is no safe way through the wilderness of this world but as one crosses a foaming torrent—fix your eyes upon God and on the other side.—Anna Warner.

CHANGE OF RATES.

In conformity with an agreement between the several papers published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the subscription price of the ADVOCATE, including postage, will hereafter be as follows, viz.:

One year	$2 50
Six months	1 50
Three months	80

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE of the ADVOCATE has been ONE DOLLAR PER YEAR to ministers of the gospel, and the same to the widows of deceased itinerant preachers. Where bills have been sent charging them more than that amount it was owing to the fact that they were not known as such to the book-keepers, and if they will inform us the accounts will be corrected. Should they have already paid we will credit the amount overpaid on subscription, or dispose of it as they may order.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

RATES.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate will be furnished to subscribers hereafter at the following rates, including postage:

One Year	$2 50
Six Months	1 50
Three Months	80

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

to all Ministers of the Gospel, traveling or local; and widows of deceased traveling preachers.

FREE ONE YEAR

to any person forwarding to us four new yearly subscribers, with TEN DOLLARS.

The Year—Old and New.

The present number of our paper is issued on the last day of the year. The ADVOCATE, its employees, and publisher and editor have come through the year alive. Many blesslugs have rested upon them, and there should be a grateful recognition of the kind Providence that has been over them. In some respects the year has been one of unusual trials with the most of our readers.

Such stringency in money matters has probably never been felt before. The political condition has been one of suspense, humiliation, oppression and agitation. In Alabama the government has passed into the hands of the Conservatives, and the prospects there are brightening. Mississippi has had no change as yet for the better. In Louisiana, while at the worst something has been done, the people are still defrauded of their rights by the iniquitous course of the Returning Board, and by the persistence of the Federal authorities in maintaining one of the most flagrant usurpations in the annals of history. Unsatisfactory as our affairs are, the people have done their duty, they have won a victory legitimately, and while much of the fruits are, for the present, wrested from them by fraud and the abuse of power, on the whole something has been gained, and we may hope that in a few years the Southern States now so nearly ruined will be redeemed and released from the infamous and oppressive rule to which they have been so long subjected. While there has been so much to depress and discourage, there is hope in the future. It is no time to give way to despondency, and to fall into a state of indifference or despair. It is still worth our while to labor and to patiently wait. The coming year, with God's blessing upon our industry and enterprise, will bring relief to many who are struggling with debt and misfortune.

In a spiritual point of view the year has been one of more than usual prosperity throughout the Southern Church. Revivals have prevailed, churches have been built, and there has been progress in almost every connectional interest. Southern Methodism was never more united and prosperous than it is to-day. Probably in no year has it gathered more members than in this.

The losses by death from the circle of our readers have been perhaps as great as in other years, but our obituary columns attest the truth of the old Wesleyan comment: that "our people die well." These weekly records of peaceful triumph and happy dying, of abundant consolation and triumph in the final hour, are our solace while we think of the company which has within the twelve months passed over the flood. Faithful unto death, they are now among the crowned, and are partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light.

It is to be hoped that the end of the year, and the beginning of the year, find us wiser and better than when we sent out our last new year's salutations. Many who now read these lines were then strangers to God, and without Christ, but they are now rejoicing in the new life of faith. This year they began to live, and their names were entered upon the Lamb's book of life. In the heavenly history it stands as the year of their birth and entrance into the fellowship of the children of God. The new year to them will be new as no other years have ever been. Let it be one of consecration, of watchfulness and of prayer.

In wishing a happy new year to all of our readers, we would for a moment introduce ourselves to every fireside, and enter into the heart-life of our people. We would be in sympathy with the sick and sorrowing, with the perplexed and careworn, with the home that has been darkened by the shadow of bereavement. We would "rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep." May a gracious Providence guide and shield all, give domestic happiness, and bestow every needed blessing.

As Christians, whether we meditate upon the past or forecast the future, "we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." With such assurance of infinite wisdom and mercy, we may gather up the lessons of the departed year, and gird up our loins for what awaits us in the year to come. While not without care for the future, there should be no carefulness which distrusts the divine promises. The thought of the morrow, however prudential and sagacious, should have in it no particle of doubt concerning the Arm upon which we lean for support. May he who "is able to do exceedingly abundantly above all that we ask or think," give a happy new year to all.

West Texas Conference.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 28, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: Two days before Christmas I found myself, by the favor of God, well through with the labor of holding four Conferences in three weeks. Of these sessions I now give you the summary.

The Harrisburg railroad has been pushed west, the past two years, until it has reached a point within twelve miles of Gonzales, and by the next West Texas Conference will be at the place appointed for the meeting—San Antonio. I arrived at Gonzales just fifteen minutes after the time for opening the session, but had been hard at work since five A. M. stirring up the stage-driver, having succeeded so far as to get the stage off by seven o'clock. The preachers were grouped about the courthouse door, waiting; but presently we were under full headway, listening to Dr. Redford's interesting and pregnant exhibit of the Publishing House. I find that these figures have a bewildering, I might almost say stunning effect upon a body of preachers accustomed to the more humble and less involved accounts of a Quarterly Conference. When the grand totals are read they impart an undefined sense of wealth to the body, which each member shares. It is a pleasant and brave start to actual business. The only check on this is that which immediately follows—the reference of individual accounts to the same committee, with directions to collect closely. I judge, however, that but little was actually gathered up. It would surely pay the house to have a representative on hand, direct, at each of the Conferences—were it only a clerk. A creditor on the spot can accomplish more in settling debts than any one can do for him. We had no person from Nashville at either of the Conferences. There were one American, one German and three full-blooded Mexicans received into the Conference on trial—Avery G. Nolan, Charles Thomas, Doroteo Garcia, Felipe N. Cordova and Fermin Vidaurri.

The last three were ordained deacons under the missionary provision. They were fine-looking men—two in early and the other in mature manhood—intelligent, well connected and well educated. Everybody was pleased with their proper and modest demeanor. They had come together by a wagon from Corpus Christi and San Diego. I suppose the Magi would have traveled the same way, only in their country the spring wagon had not as yet substituted the camel and dromedary. These men had brought with them a very precious freight in honor of the King, fully as much so as the gold, incense and myrrh of the east—one of them reported a membership of sixty-two converted Mexicans, and another of sixty-eight, besides some nineteen children baptized; the third, Vidaurri, had not as yet had charge of a work. When we consider that these men could neither speak nor understand English, and knew only their native Spanish, they might be regarded rather as missionaries sent to us than as the fruit of any messengers sent by us to them. Have they not come as the wise men came, unlooked for, to stir up the very heart of Israel? They constitute a powerful appeal to us as a church to be at work, lest our Lord himself come and find us sleeping; to heat'r ourselves, and send forth the light of that powerful and glorious system of heavenly truth which God has conferred upon us for the benefit of the myriads, on this continent and elsewhere, who have as yet no just thought of the Spirit of the power of life which was in Jesus Christ.

A Mexican border mission district was constituted, and the Rev. A. H. Sutherland was appointed the presiding elder of it. Its appointments are:

Corpus Christi—Doroteo Garcia.
San Diego—Felipe Cordova.
Laredo—Fermin Vidaurri.
Brownsville Mexican mission—To be supplied.
Rio Grande City Mexican mission—To be supplied.
Conception and Presenas Mexican mission—To be supplied.

So just as Bro. Alejo Hernandez has been stricken helpless with paralyzing rheumatism, and is back again at Matamoras, God has raised up three others, as it were, to take his place. The only limit to this work of grace among these people is the want of money to employ men who can speak, in the tongue in which they were born, the news of life. The Holy Ghost is already in advance of us, waiting for a man's voice to pour out upon every little and large town his blessings of repentance, of faith and love. It costs about $40 a month to support a Mexican missionary. Now if any school, or church, or person or Conference wishes to have such a direct representative of good will to the heathen, let them send that amount monthly to either the secretaries of the Missionary Society, to myself, or to Mr. William Henden, at Corpus Christi, who is my agent for managing all finances with this Mexican border work. I make this suggestion because I have letters inquiring how schools and churches can be brought into direct connection with the missionary work. The following letter from Rev. Mr. Graybill will give some interesting intelligence from Bro. Hernandez, and command for him the prayers of our people:

MATAMORAS, November 21, 1874.

BISHOP J. C. KEENER—Rev. and Dear Sir: At the request of Alejo Hernandez, your former missionary in Mexico, I write you a few lines with reference to his condition here. The Protestant Mexicans and we missionaries visit him frequently. At his request we meet at his house twice per week, at night, to sing and pray with him, he conducting the service. This affords him great comfort. We do all we can to contribute to his comfort. No one thinks it possible for him to recover, however, neither has he much hope, although he is under treatment by a German physician who promises to make no charges unless he cures him. We deeply regret the loss of so valuable a man in the cause of the gospel in Mexico. He still preaches Christ to those who visit him, and I hope that his sojourn here may be greatly blessed to this people. I am sorry that the Protestant Mexicans here are too poor to contribute anything to his temporal comfort, and that his relations, being Romanists, are neither willing nor able, as he tells me. I have been greatly encouraged in my labors in Matameras and Brownsville. God, early in my labors, has raised up a young Mexican, full of wisdom and the Spirit, to assist me in the work, and in our meetings, both here and in Brownsville, we have a promising attendance. With common prayer and effort with you for the extension of Christ's kingdom in Mexico, I am yours in the gospel,

A. T. GRAYBILL,
Supt. of Presbyterian Mission in Mx.

Our missionary meeting at Gonzales was, on the whole, a very good one, yielding some $375, though only the amount actually paid in is reported. I am glad that the foreign work is to stand for the next four years upon its own bottom—we shall be able to know how much hold it has on our people. Let us understand which are the lean and which the fat kine, and which does the swallowing.

The general outlook of this Conference has much improved since I visited it two years ago. The territory is an admirable one—plenty of room, good soil, cheap living, with some straggling Comanches. The climate is most delightful. I noticed that the peach does remarkably well; trees of ten years' standing were still vigorous; and men were driving about flocks of turkeys at fifty cents each—the only difficulty being the fifty cents, which—that is, the fifty cents—I was surprised to learn was as hard to secure as a wild turkey.

The whole membership of this Conference is 4,502, with 62 local preachers, being an increase over last year of 643 members and 18 local preachers. When it is remembered that there are few immigrants from the States who find their way this far south in Texas, this may be reckoned a good year's work. Its entire missionary collection for the year is $1,213.70. The cause of education is not neglected by it. Two institutions—the Coronal Institute, and the school at Goliad—are under its care, and the Texas University is the college to which it is pledged in common with the other Texas Conferences. It paid about sixty per cent. upon its widows' and orphans' claims.

The Conference adjourned on Monday at one o'clock, and in two hours the ministers were on their way toward their several fields as if on express, and by four o'clock, when I started for the East Texas Conference, they had nearly all disappeared, like the golden clouds of the evening, only to reappear in other lands as the beautiful harbingers of a new day.

Yours truly, J. C. KEENER.

From Mexico.

CITY OF MEXICO, Nov. 20, 1874.

MR. EDITOR: Of the two hundred and odd villages in the valley of Mexico, in point of beauty and wealth Tacubayo perhaps takes first rank. It is well situated just at the edge or on the first steppes of the mountain range to the west of Mexico. A living stream of water is conducted from these mountains to and distributed throughout the town. There are two railroads from Mexico—one stopping at the other passing through Tacubayo to San Angel and Tlapham, a few leagues beyond. The horse cars, large and roomy, leave the grand plaza, fronting the palace, each half hour. The other trains (steam) not so frequent, starting from the northern center of the city, pass on through to the places mentioned. The distance is about four miles; fare, one real (twelve and a half cents.)

Tacubayo, I suppose, is as old as Mexico. In the early histories of the country it is mentioned in connection with the city of the Montezumas. The one has attained a population of over two hundred thousand, the other remains but little more than a village. Its population is variable—in the summer months perhaps seven thousand, in winter not more than five thousand. It is considerably higher than Mexico. This, with other reasons, though so near to its more pretentious neighbor, causes it to be considered a summer retreat from the usual sickness prevailing in those months. Many of the rich have built magnificent, palace-like residences, and surrounded them with the most beautiful of gardens. Among these are the Barons Escandens, the Rothchilds of Mexico—Iturbe Belsiequi, Bardet Cervantes and others. The premises are large, and inclosed with high stone walls. These gardens are more like the hiding-places of fairies than for the pleasure of man. There is a repose, a soft, subdued air, an unearthly poetry about them that must be sensitive to the presence and touch of rough, sinful man. Upon the calm surface of peaceful lakes sits, in silence and grace, the most graceful of all birds—the swan. Fancy pleasure boats lie at their moorings. Golden fish lazily move in the placid depths, now rising to the surface, then with quickened steps darting below, burdened with the flashing rays of light. Curiously colored ducks crawl out and rest on the velvet green, sloping banks. Improvised islands, covered with rose and honeysuckle, breaks and yet fills the picture. The humming-bird, on tireless wing, floats, as in an atmosphere of sweets, from flower to flower. Rustic bridges cross ravines and improvised running streams. Rustic summer houses and curiously shaped pagodas, covered with clambering, blooming vines, invite to repose and thought. Fountains of marble send forth strangely-formed jets, sometimes a single central column to the height of eight or ten feet, sometimes in fine spray, and sometimes in paper-like circles. Here and there are artificial grottoes, solid-looking piles of rough, volcanic stone, containing wide subterranean passages, really forming miniature caves. Flower-lined, winding paths lead to the top, terminating in grassy plots beneath the shade of friendly trees. Graveled walks and wide stone-paved ways, bordered with hedge roses and verbenas, are laid off with exact regularity. In wandering through these gardens one can but recall pictures of the Garden of Eden. Here, beneath this dense shade, singing birds, flitting through the leaves above, the very atmosphere redolent with innocence, would Adam have rested himself in the noontide heat; while just there, almost within touch, would the glassy lake reflect, to her delight, the image of Eve. All things—climate, fruits, flowers, birds, trees, lakes and running streams—impart to them an Eden-like spirit of innocent repose. What grand temples have we here for the pure worship of the great God!

One is continually impressed with this thought in Mexico: that money can come nearer making an earthly paradise here than perhaps anywhere else in the world. But what is a paradise without the Savior—without the hope of heaven? What does all of earthly beauty and earthly advantages amount to without a sense of pardoned sin and an assurance of the friendship of God? May he hasten the day when the last vestige of spiritual bondage shall be swept away from these dear people, and this lovely, thrice lovely country.

One of the principal objects of interest in Tacubayo is the military college—the West Point of Mexico. It is situated upon a high point, west and about half a mile from the center of the town. A broad, stone-paved way leads up from the depot plaza, I suppose with a grade of five per cent. The college is a noble-looking stone building, after the architecture of the country, with large courts or patios, broad stairways, corridors and flat roof. It is the old convent of San Diego. The government took possession of it, for its present purposes, in 1868. The observatory is new—just completed. It is well arranged and well supplied. The number of cadets is limited to two hundred. This number is made up something after the manner of the United States. The curriculum seems to be thorough and exhaustive. The class in English number about forty. There is a professor of swimming. The president or commandant, Colonel ——, is a clever, affable gentleman. He is about forty years of age, and speaks English very well. From the observatory there is perhaps one of the finest views in all this country of unrivaled views. Looking eastward, you have almost a bird's-eye view of Mexico—with Mexicans the city of cities. On a level with the eye are the towers of the grand cathedral. Many other churches and public buildings stand out in full relief. Beyond are the mountains, rising one above another, until crowned by perpetual snow. The eye, traveling back from these snow regions, falls upon the intervening lakes, gently moving in the morning breeze. A little to the right, northeast, and but a short distance from the city, stands in the flat plain the solitary Pinon, looking over across the city at its twin brother, Chapultepec. These two are curious mountain formations. They are on opposite sides of the city, and about the same distance. They are about the same size and height. They are equally removed from other mountains. One sends forth living springs of pure, cold water, the other living streams of boiling water. The Pinon appears higher than Chapultepec, but it has never been utilized as the latter by man. On Chapultepec, you remember, stands the palace of the republic. Here to the right, about three miles from and southward to the city, is the village of our Lady Guadeloupe. You see the church of Guadeloupe plainly mounted on that high rock. To the left still, coming round in a circle, are several small villages, with hard names that I can't remember, neither could your readers pronounce them were it otherwise. Coming in from the grand sweep, you rest at Chapultepec. The castle has a fine appearance. A city set on a hill cannot be hid. The giant old trees, now so green, around about its base, furnish a fine contrast with the gray rock and white castle. In this view of Chapultepec you include a most famous spot, well remembered, doubtless, by many of your countrymen. It is Molino del Rey (the King's Mill.) Here was fought and won, nearly thirty years ago, one of Scott's most costly battles. Seven hundred noble fellows went down in one charge. It is admitted by all, I believe, that, if the Mexicans had known it, the day was theirs. But giving the Americans time to rally, the fortunes of the hour changed, and Scott held in his hands the key of the citadel.

In all the revolutions and wars in Mexico Tacubayo has played a conspicuous part. It was occupied by Cortez as well as by many more modern and less famous generals. In the American war referred to it formed a strong point for Scott, Worth and Pillow. When Maximilian was shut up in Queretero, and the brave and generous Porfirio Diaz besieged the remnant of his foreign forces in Mexico, Tacubaye was the headquarters of his army. It commands the water supplies as well as many of the city's important outlets.

Speaking of the Americans in Mexico, I neglected to mention, in its proper connection, that the stone road spoken of, leading up to the military college, was built by American prisoners nearly forty years ago. The thought tends to sadden a true American as he walks or rides over it. And yet, doubtless, it was a mercy to the poor fellows to work in a Mexican sun, under Mexican guards—far preferable to being shut up in a close prison. How different the state of feeling now between the two republics! Side by side they live, only a narrow river running between, working a common, a grand destiny. Americans live in peace in Mexico, and Mexicans in equal peace and with equal rights in the United States. They may draw inspiration from each other, stimulate each other to good works, be earnest rivals and yet sincere friends. May the onward march of republicanism, of civil and religious liberty, usher in the day speedily when spiritual bondage shall disappear, and the simple worship of Christ be firmly established in the earth.

JOEL T. DAVES.

BISHOP MARVIN, says the Raleigh Christian Advocate of December 16, left the city on Thursday evening to spend the Sabbath at Spartanburg, South Carolina. He will preside over the South Carolina Conference, which convenes at Greenville, South Carolina, on Wednesday, the sixteenth instant. This closes his episcopal labors for the present year. From this Conference he returns to his home in St. Louis. We shall ever welcome him back again to our Conference in his official capacity. He is a model presiding officer and a grand gospel preacher.

BISHOP KEENER arrived from his Texas tour on Christmas eve. He has had a hard service, but returns in good preservation. He will probably visit the Louisiana Conference at its approaching session in Alexandria, January 6.

THE Rev. Henry B. Cowles, of the Virginia Conference, died in Petersburg, Virginia, November 28. He was a leader among his brethren.

THE reports from some twenty-four or twenty-five Conferences show an increase of some twenty-seven thousand members. There are some ten or twelve Conferences yet to report.

Death of D'Arcy Paul.

This morning, Monday, December 14, we had the following from Rev. W. W. Duncan:

"PETERSBURG, December 13.

"Bro. Paul died this morning at half-past three o'clock. His funeral will take place at eleven o'clock A. M. on Tuesday, the fifteenth instant. Please inform the brethren."

The foremost layman in our church in Virginia has closed a life of eighty years—a life of Christian work rarely equaled in any age of the church of God. His name has been as a household word among us for half a century.

In the heart now cold in death the love of Christ glowed with increasing brightness to the very edge of Jordan.

Bro. Paul never seemed to us to grow old. He walked, talked, worked and sang as a young man. Some men, as age creeps upon them, allow their interest in the church to wane. Not so with him; in everything that had religion in it he showed an unabated interest to the last day of earthly life. Only two weeks before his death, at the funeral of his well-beloved brother, Cowles, he led the solemn choir music, and his soul, as indeed it always did in singing, seemed to soar away to the highest mountain of glory.

We think there never has been a man among us just like D'Arcy Paul. We never expect to look upon his like again. His character had all the elements that make a man truly great. He commanded, beyond any one we have ever known, the confidence of men—we mean all men, in and out of the church, with whom he came in contact. To him pre-eminently may be applied the language of St. Paul: "Not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, distributing to the necessity of the saints, given to hospitality."

Intelligent to a high degree, and even amid the pressure of constant and often harassing and perplexing business constantly storing his mind with the best thoughts of the best authors, he was most entertaining and instructive in the social circle. Abiding in the divine love, he had a Christian firmness that never compromised a principle and never deserted a field of duty.

As a counselor he was wise, cautious and independent. What he felt to be right he would adhere to against the world, against the universe. His brethren delighted to honor him, and he was worthy of all they bestowed. Since the introduction of the lay element into the councils of our church his name has stood at the head of the list for the Annual and General Conferences, and would have stood there if he had lived a hundred years.

What amount he bestowed in charity can never be known on earth. He truly made a friend of the mammon of unrighteousness, and by a noble benevolence and a living faith his path was opened to an everlasting habitation.

What a void the death of such a man makes in the community where he lived, and where from sire to son for three generations his name has been a synonym for all that is pure, true and generous in human nature! And what a void his death will make in the church!

Brethren, "know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?"

A NEW ADVOCATE.—The Sunday School Companion, published at Baltimore, comes out as the Baltimore Christian Advocate. The publisher says:

We announced in the last number of the Sunday Companion that on account of the confusion which resulted from the similarity in name between the Sunday Companion and our monthly, the Sunday School Companion, we expected at an early date to change the name of the paper. We now do this, taking the name of the Baltimore Christian Advocate.

In changing the name of this paper we also modify its character. The editor, publisher and proprietors are members of the Southern Methodist Church. They believe its doctrines, love its ordinances and prefer laboring for its prosperity.

THE TRANSIT OF VENUS.—At Nagasaki, Japan, the American expedition took nearly two hundred micrometic measurements and sixty excellent photographs. The transit was successfully observed at Hobart Town, Adelaide and Melbourne, in Australia. The American party at Hobart Town obtained one hundred and eighteen photographs. At Shanghai, China, the sun was obscured by clouds. In India and Egypt the observations were successful. At Thebes many successful photographs were taken. At Teheran, Persia, the observations were successful, but in Russia and Siberia they failed.

Altogether the astronomers will be gratified at their success. It will take many months to work up the results of these observations, but the world will then have the satisfaction of knowing exactly how far it is from the sun.—Christian Observer.

PROF. DUNCAN, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, writes us, Wofford College, Spartanburg, South Carolina, December 9: "We are in the midst of a glorious revival here—one hundred converts up to December 1. The majority of the students have been converted, and among them the son of Bishop Keener. I am not certain of the number since the first instant, but several have professed, and it is spreading through the village."

RELIGION is not confined to devotional exercises, but rather consists in doing all we are called and qualified to do, with a single eye to God's glory and will, from a grateful sense of his mercy to us. This is the alchemy which turns everything into gold, and stamps a value upon common actions.—J. Newton.

Notes from the Field.

HOME REVIVALS AND MISSIONARY ZEAL.

Does it not seem that revivals among the home churches should be followed by enlarged contributions, by the increase of candidates for the foreign field, and by a general quickening of the church in all the elements and expressions of true missionary zeal? It was so in ancient Antioch—the great awakening was followed by a most notable missionary meeting, and by the departure of the pioneers in missionary enterprise. From present indications it seems that the increase in the membership of the Southern Methodist Church during the last twelve months is at least thirty thousand. Will there not be a proportionate increase in our missionary contributions? If not, there is something wrong about our revivals. May we not expect to hear of men and women "called"—that is the word—to be missionaries to the heathen? If there are such persons among us let them write to some of our bishops, or to the missionary secretaries. Although the board has not now the money to send them, we wish to know who they are. We shall be better off after awhile. These reflections have been suggested by a sentence from the organ of the Basle Missionary Society, quoted by the Monthly Record:

"We hope that the gracious visitation which Scotland has been experiencing will contribute its share to supply the lack of missionary candidates, and that a new day will dawn on the Free Church missions—a day worthy the memories of the past—a day in which this church, hitherto so richly blessed, shall still more fully deserve the name of a missionary church." In the same connection we may quote a paragraph from the Missionary Record (Church of Scotland,) that might have been written by the secretaries of our own board, so perfectly does it suit our case: 'At every one of our stations more missionaries are required to do the system justice, to relieve and strengthen those who now are overtasked, and to take full advantage of the varied openings of Providence for the spread of evangelic truth. The Lord put it into the hearts of not a few of our licentiates and students to come forward, saying: 'Here am I; send me.'" What say our licentiates and students?

WOMAN'S PART IN THE WORK OF MISSIONS.

Nearly all the mission boards are now employing female missionaries. In fact it is now thought by most persons who have considered the subject, indispensable to employ women in the work of foreign missions.

The Rev. Dr. Williamson, of the United Presbyterian Church, at a recent Missionary Conference at Chefoo, in China, very pithily and conclusively stated the case. He said: "One fact is too much overlooked by the people at home: that women form one-half of the human race, and that in China the women are open only to female influence. I am sure, if this fact were realized in England and America, far more ladies would come abroad to the relief of their unfortunate and unhappy sisters." It is entirely too late in the day to inquire as to the propriety and utility of employing female missionaries; missionary history has settled the question. From Paul's day to this God has greatly blessed the work of Christian women in the foreign mission-field. God has set his broad seal of approval upon their labors. Take the following illustrative paragraph from the Gleaner:

A BIBLE WOMAN IN THE PUNJAB.

"Mrs. Elmslie, the widow of the lamented Dr. Elmslie, of Cashmere, who now superintends the orphanages and the Bible woman at Umritsur, writes in her last report concerning the latter as follows:

"Our Bible woman, Susan, continues to find a welcome almost everywhere she goes. She is in the habit of visiting a tank to which many of the women of the city go to bathe. On the steps leading down to the water she seats herself, and at once begins to read some simple passage from the gospels. Soon a little cluster of women gathers round her—some to question, others to listen with reverence—a touchingly wistful expression in their dark eyes, as if they thought these glad tidings too good to be true for them. They do not stay long, but as they go others take their place at Susan's feet, and she goes on repeating the same blessed messages of love and mercy, varying her words and illustrations with a good deal of dexterity. The women very often say: 'Ah, we have never heard of such a Savior; our gods never died for us—they do not love us—but if we do not worship them our husbands will send us away and take other wives. What can we do?' As Susan herself endured this sorrow for the Master's sake, she can assure them that he can comfort even under such a trial. Many ask her to come to them in their own homes, and thus her work widens far beyond her power to carry on.'"

ABSENT ON COLLECTION SUNDAY.

The Gleaner for November gives us another suggestive item, with appropriate comments:

"Is any one of our readers ever 'absent on collection Sunday'—say on the one only day in the year when an opportunity is given to help forward the extension among the heathen of his kingdom whom we profess to love? Perhaps not willfully, though even that is not a thing that never happens. But let us suppose your absence is unavoidable. What then? Is the absence of your contribution unavoidable too? So did not think the writer of the following letter, addressed the other day to one of our Church Missionary Society district secretaries:

"'R——, P——, September 10.

"'DEAR SIR: I find on my return home, after a two months' absence, that you have paid us your annual visit in the cause of the Church Missionary Society. I beg to inclose my check for £2 2s. as my contribution toward it, and am yours truly,

J. N.'

"In this case the absentee doubled his usual contribution—which, by the way, is a thing most people could do without feeling it, whether they be guinea or shilling subscribers. Let us remember that

> "We lose what on ourselves we spend;
> We have as treasure without end
> Whatever, Lord, to thee we lend,
> Who givest all!"

Here let me close these notes by a quotation that I beg may be considered by wealthy persons who talk about "the widow's mite," and who "average" their contributions with those of the poor. Bishop Medley says: "God will not refuse the poor offerings of the poor; but he will not accept the poor offerings of the rich."

THE CHRISTIAN IN THE WORLD. By Rev. D. W. Faunce. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1875.

The Hon. Richard Fletcher, of Boston, left to Dartmouth College a special fund from the avails of which was to be offered biennially a prize of $500 for the best essay on the Christian's relations and duties to the world. This work is the Fletcher prize essay. The committee of award was composed of eminent men—a Baptist, a Congregationalist and a Methodist. It is a volume replete with interest, and will prove useful to all earnest Christian readers. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

DRESS REFORM. A series of lectures delivered in Boston on dress as it affects the health of women. Edited by Abba Goold Woolson. Boston: Roberts Bros., 1874.

Five lectures by as many different female lecturers. A good book, we expect. We commend it to our readers among the ladies. Reform is needed, but we have little faith in its being brought about much before the millennium. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

SONGS FROM THE SOUTH. By Ellen A. Hebron. Baltimore: Published by Eugene R. Smith, 1875.

This volume, 12mo, 245 pages, handsomely bound and printed, contains some poetry. Taken as a whole, it is not without interest, and will be welcomed and appreciated, especially by Southern readers.

GOOD WORDS for December has: Novantia, Letters from H. M. S. Challenger, On Forbidding Those Who Follow Not With Us, The Emigrant Lassie, Bishop Horsley, Theresa, Euthanasia, A Day in a Dock-Yard, Moses and Ezekiel, and other articles of great merit.

THE Sunday Magazine for December has: Bessy Wells, The Promise of the Presence, The Samaritans, Religious Life in the Fourteenth Century, The First Christmas Sermon, Military Notes on the Battles of the Bible, and other articles, all of great merit.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for January is splendidly illustrated and has a fine table of contents. We note especially: Travels in South America, The Canons of the Colorado, A Bouquet of Japanese Verses, Bazaine's Prison, and other articles.

To a Generous Public.

The beautiful and valuable church edifice of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at this place, was totally destroyed by the tornado of the night of the twenty-second ultimo.

The friends and membership of this church, after mature deliberation, have resolved to rebuild at once, provided assistance can be had from abroad, they being unable within themselves to accomplish this object.

They hereby ask the sympathy of all persons, and in this way make their earnest appeal for help to the liberality of their own people, and likewise to all Christians of other denominations.

Please send all contributions to Sylvester Steele, treasurer.

PAY POSTAGE.—Subscribers whose subscriptions have been paid at the old rates—viz.: two dollars per year—and whose subscriptions run into 1875, are required under the new postage law, which goes into effect January 1, to pay postage at the office of mailing. The subscription price hereafter includes the postage. Two cents per month each month that the subscription has to run, will be sufficient to pay for the ADVOCATE.

RISKS ON REMITTANCES.—Money may be sent to the publisher of the ADVOCATE in payment of subscriptions, in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, by registered letter, at his risk. Any amounts may be sent by express or postoffice money order at his risk, provided that in all the above cases the expense of remitting he borne by the person who remits. Otherwise it will be at their own risk.

LOOK OUT FOR ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.—Subscribers and other persons writing to us should look in the letter list for the acknowledgment of their letters. The letters which reach us on or before Saturday of each week are acknowledged in the issue of the following Thursday.

IMPORTANT TO PLANTERS AND MERCHANTS.—The iron cotton tie is in universal requisition with the cotton planters, and the agency of Messrs. R. W. Rayne & Co. (late Bartlett & Rayne) has become one of our necessary institutions. It is fortunate that a branch of business so necessary to planters has fallen into the hands of gentlemen who have the capital, enterprise and confidence of the merchants and producers.

WINDOW SHADES AND WALL PAPER.—We call attention to the advertisement of M. A. Wheelahan, Esq., importer and dealer in shades, wall paper, paints, oils, glass, etc. Send orders to No. 119 Common street, or call at the office, where customers may rely upon the polite attention of W. J. Golden, Esq., who has been for several years connected with the establishment.

PIANOS.—See the advertisement of Philip Werlein. He offers instruments of the best manufacturers at the lowest rates. This establishment has in the last few years shown great enterprise, and has been greatly enlarged in size, stock and variety of instruments, as well as additions to stock of music.

LEATHER STORE.—See the advertisement of A. F. Ricau, an extensive importer and dealer in leather and findings.

DR. HUNTER

ON

The Throat and Its Diseases.

LETTER IV.

In my letter on Catarrh and Ozæna I pointed out the danger of neglecting these diseases of the nose, and explained their liability to extend to the Ears, Throat and Lungs.

When Catarrh or a seated cold falls upon the throat it first attacks the mucous membrane, but soon involves the tonsil glands, the soft palate, and the little follicles, which, in health, secrete the lubricating mucus.

Most persons in this climate are liable to frequent attacks of cold during the winter months. These fall first upon the nostrils and then spread to the throat. People who are in vigorous health throw them off without apparent injury, but those of more delicate organism do not do so. All winter through they are more or less troubled, and it is only after warm weather comes that they can be said to be free. But do they in reality get well even then? That is a question of great moment; for if not, as the cold weather again approaches, they discover that the throat is tender, that they have a tickling sensation, which excites a hacking kind of cough two or three times a day, and later that the voice becomes husky in speaking and reading aloud. On looking into the throat under such circumstances we find the lining membrane rough and uneven. Little points or granulations are seen scattered over its surface. Sometimes these exist in patches, but more commonly each granulation is a distinct raised point.

This is what we doctors call "Granulated Sore Throat," or more properly "Tuberculous Throat." Of all the diseases to which the throat is liable this is the most serious. It is properly the sequel of Catarrh, and the beginning of Consumption. These granulations constitute what is known as tubercles, and as soon as they spread to the Larynx and down into the air-tubes and cells the disease becomes Consumption. Every breath you draw has a tendency to carry it onward and hasten its development. The huskiness of the voice before mentioned, the frequent efforts to clear it, the bluish, sticky kind of mucus which is forced up, all indicate the spread of the irritation down the windpipe, and the danger which threatens the patient. The transition from Catarrh to Granular Throat, and from Granular Throat to Consumption, when neglected, is certain, and in most cases rapid.

There is one point to which I must advert in this connection, 'Persons afflicted with consumption have, as a rule, a great unwillingness to admit that they are in any danger until the disease is far advanced. This arises, no doubt, from the error of supposing such to be hopeless. But no such delusion exists in regard to throat diseases, and yet the same folly of neglecting it is committed. They put off treatment as long as possible, in hopes that it will get well of its own accord. While they are waiting, uncertain what to do, tubercles form in the lungs. In this way most cases of consumption arise.

Go to your friends who are now in consumption and ask them how their disease began. They will, with scarcely an exception, tell you that it came on just as I have described, steadily, step by step, almost without being noticed, and without any treatment calculated to resist its development. Until a severe attack of cold, followed by active congestion of the lungs, awakened them to their real state, and revealed the existence of seated diseases to the lungs, they had no thought of danger. Their lives are the sacrifice of their negligence, and want of medical direction.

Be wise before it is too late. If you have anything the matter with the nose or throat you cannot begin an hour too soon to get rid of it. Every day's delay but makes its hold more inveterate and its cure more difficult. But all such cases are curable by proper treatment. Applications to the throat alone do no good, because before the physician's aid is sought the disease has passed below the throat into the windpipe and bronchial tubes, and the applications do not reach the whole of the diseased surface. Even should the throat improve under such treatment, the disease lower down would be aggravated in a corresponding degree. In my practice the number of people who come under my care for diseased lungs, who had previously been treated by other physicians for throat affections, was truly surprising, and in almost every instance they attributed the lung disease to this partial treatment of their throats. Every point where disease has made a lodgment must be thoroughly reached, and acted upon at the same time. By alkaline washes, warm alterative vapors applied by the inhaler, and careful attention to the general health, these diseases, which have hitherto baffled the skill of general physicians, become as amenable to treatment and as curable as other diseases of the system.

A SERMON FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

BY ALICK CARY.

Don't ever go hunting for pleasures;
They can't be found thus, I know;
Nor yet fall a-digging for treasures,
Unless with the spade and the hoe!

The bee has to work for the honey,
The drone has no right to the food,
And he who has not earned his money

The ant builds her house with her labor,
The squirrel looks out for his mast,
And he who depends on his neighbor
Will never have friends, first or last.

In short, 'tis no better than thieving,
Though thief is a harsh name to call,
Good things to be always receiving,
And never to give back at all.

And do not put off till to-morrow
The thing that you ought to do now,
But first set the share in the furrow,
And then set your hand to the plow.

The time is too short to be waiting,
The day maketh haste to the night,
And it's just as hard work to be hating
Your work as to do it outright.

And all the fresh morning is gone:
Who puts to the world's wheel a shoulder
Is he that will move the world on.

Don't weary out will with delaying,
And when you are crowded, don't stop;
Believe me there's truth in the saying:
"There always is room at the top."

To conscience be true, and to man true,
Keep faith, hope and love in your breast,
And when you have done all you can do,
Why, then you may trust for the rest.

Too Much Gold.

BY "SQUID SCOTCH."

"Now, papa, you must tell me an ambitious story to-night."

Minnie Percy had seated herself, without help, in her papa's lap. He was sitting in a large arm-chair pretending to be asleep. He had his hand over his eyes, his elbow resting on the arm of his chair. Minnie knew well enough he was playing "possum," so she had climbed up and curled herself down for a good-night story. Her father laughed. "An ambitious story—I don't understand;" he pinched her pink cheek, and pulled a curl one side, then the other, and after two or three "creepy mouses" Minnie recovered from her glee enough to say:

"Why, you know, papa, what that means; it's a story that isn't true—it's all 'splained in one of the Kallo books you read me."

"Oh, you mean fictitious; you must be careful when you use long words, or you will trip, my puss."

"Yes, that's it—fictitious. I mean something that didn't happen, you know."

"Are you thinking, papa?"

"Yes, yes, let me see," he replied, rubbing his forehead. The fact was, he had to tell stories so often that it kept him busy, though some stories Minnie liked to hear over and over. "Didn't I hear my little daughter, a while ago, at her play, saying: 'I wish I had a gold dress and gold doll, gold dishes, gold bed, gold room, and everything I had was gold.'"

"I guess"—Minnie smiled and dropped her head, so her papa couldn't see her dimples—"I guess I was telling Nellie Weeks that when we were playing visit."

Then her papa snatched a dozen kisses from her soft cheek and red lips before he proceeded. "Does my little girl think she would be any happier if everything she had was gold?"

"N—no; but it would be nice," she faltered.

"Well, I think I will tell you not only an ambitious—"

"Fictitious, papa. I remember now," said Minnie.

"Well, not only a fictitious story, but a classical one; you are so fond of long names."

"What's classical?"

"I supposed you would ask, so I have my answer ready. It means the best writers. It used to apply only to the Greeks and Romans, who are considered the best models of fine writing; now it includes modern authors of the first rank—those well versed in ancient languages, those who write the most pure, correct and refined. Your brother's Virgil and Sallust are Latin classical books, and papa's Plato and Demosthenes are Greek. Now I am going to tell you a very old story, written by one of these classical authors.

"There was once a great king in Phrygia named Midas. We know there was such a country, and it is described as being high table-land, abounding in corn and wine, and celebrated for its fine sheep and cattle. It is mentioned in the Bible, for St. Paul traveled over it twice, preaching the gospel. But this king—we are not so sure about him, but the story has been handed down from generation to generation about him. He was very fond of show and power. To have these he must have gold. One time Bacchus, who was god of wine, was having a great jubilee with his followers, when they missed Silenus; he was Bacchus' tutor, and was very old now, and feeble with dissipation. While under the influence of wine he lost his way, and went into the kingdom of Phrygia, and was taken to the king. He made a great feast and kept him ten days, then he took him back to Bacchus, who was so grateful for the return of his foster-father that he told Midas he would grant him any wish he might request. Then what did the foolish king reply:

"Give me," says he—nor thought he asked too much—
That, with my body whatsoe'er I touch,
Changed from the nature which it held of old,
May be converted into yellow gold."

He had his wish and started home. He broke a branch from a tree as he walked along—behold, it turned to gold; then he touched a stone—it turned to gold. He grew more excited as well as delighted; he had only to lay a finger on any subject, and it turned to gold. When he went into his palace the pillars were shining gold where he carelessly touched. Then in his transport he ordered his slaves to prepare a feast of the daintiest dishes; so they did, and set before their happy lord. But, alas, now see him. He takes a piece of bread—it is gold; a piece of meat—it is gold; he begins to get alarmed, and snatches his wine-cup.

"Ah! no change," he said; "the charm is broken." He looked relieved.

The king put it to his lips. Ah, the wine was fluid gold as it ran from his mouth. Now he grows sick of his wish, of his power. He is afraid of starving, so he confesses his folly to Bacchus, and begs him to take back his gift. Bacchus bade him wash in the river Pactolus; when he did, all the sand turned to gold; he hated the sight of it, so much so that he would not let his people gather it, so it was washed away. The gold had not made him happy but a very short time.

"Oh, papa," exclaimed Minnie, "I'll never, never wish for everything to be gold again; then I couldn't eat grandma's doughnuts, or mamma's orange cake, or Bridget's cookies."

"One would think you live upon cake. I am not sure but cake may be as fatal as gold, though it would take some longer to die from the effects of it than starvation."

"Oh, I have to be stinted; I can have only just so much; but I have wished everything we ate was cake, I like it so. I see I must not; that would be wrong!"

"Yes, my daughter; but to return to our story. I wish you to remember it was what you asked for, a fictitious story, though, like many of those old stories and legends, it contains a good moral. Be satisfied with what you have, and do not spend valuable time in vain wishes, for many times, if gratified, we should find them as hateful to us as the king Midas did his gold."—Interior.

A Parable.

I held in my hand a little dry tree, an infant hemlock. Had it lived a century it might have towered up above all the forest, and held up its head in majesty. But it grew on a sort of a bog, and a muskrat, digging his hole under it, bit off its roots, and it was dead. It was full of limbs and knots and gnarls, and I felt curious to know how it happened that it was so.

"Poor fellow! If you had all these limbs and knots to support, I don't wonder you died."

"And with my roots, which were my mouths with which to feed, all cut off too."

"Yes, but where do all these ugly limbs come from?" said I.

"Just where all ugly things come from," said he. "I am pretty much like you men. Find out where my limbs come from, and you will find where all human sins come from."

"I'll take you at your word, sir."

So I took out my knife and peeled off all the bark. But the limbs and the knots were left.

"You must go deeper than that, sir."

So I began to split and take off layer of wood after layer. But all the knots were there.

"Deeper still," said the dry stick.

Then I split it all down to the heart, taking it all off and separating it. The heart was laid bare; it looked like a small rod about six feet long, and perhaps an inch through at the large end. Ah! and I was now surprised to see that every limb and knot and gnarl started in the heart. Every one was there, and every one grew out of the heart. The germ or the starting-point of each one was the center of the heart.

THE BAD DREAM.—"Mother, I dreamed of seeing a great black snake last night, and trying so hard to run away. Yet I could not stir a step. I awoke in a fright. Norah says it is a sure sign of having an enemy who will give me trouble."

"I think it is more likely a sign that you ate something which hurt you at tea with Kitty Mason last evening," said mother, smiling. "Do you remember what you ate?"

"Oh, everything nice, mother."

"That easily accounts for your bad dreams, and if there is no explanation for them, it would be wrong and foolish to think of them as a 'sign' of anything. God does not take that way of warning us of trouble. He gives us reason to guide us, and his holy word to make our way plain. When Norah or any one else calls anything a 'sign,' you need not believe them. It is a very bad habit of mind to fall into."

I know people who would not take a journey or begin any new work on Friday. They are in the greatest distress if the suit is spilled, a looking-glass broken, or if a poor little bird by mistake flies in at the window. They consider these sure signs of trouble.—Child's World.

"SIR, you are too slow!" said the town-hall clock to the market-place dial.

"Am I, sir?" I am sorry, but I believe I am always with the church tower," said the dial.

"The church tower is seldom right," said the town-hall clock.

"You surprise me!" said the dial. "I thought that it was regulated by the sun."

"Probably," replied the town-hall clock; "but the sun is not always with me, therefore he is not always to be depended on. If you wish to be right, look at me, and you are safe."

The dial stared, and if he hadn't been afraid of discomposing his works would have shook his head. "Now," he said to himself, "if he had stopped at telling me I was wrong, or if he had gone so far as to say that the church tower was not always according to the sun, I might have listened with respect; but since he has the audacity to attack the sun itself, and declare that nobody is right but himself, why, he is not worthy of a tick in reply, nor a moment's consideration."

MACHIAVEL says: "War is a profession by which man cannot live honorably—an employment by which the soldier, if he would reap any profit, is obliged to be false, rapacious and cruel."

Preserving Milk.

The American Artisan has an account of a new process, the invention of Mr. L. F. Kirchofer, for preserving milk. The object of this invention is to subject milk to such a treatment that, without altering its elements or taste, and without the addition of any foreign substance, it may be preserved in its natural state for several months without change, except the rising of cream, whether it be kept in a state of rest, or subject to constant movement, as in sea voyages. If this object be accomplished, the invention is a most important one, as condensed milk is not in favor with most people when used directly as an article of food, although it is excellent when used in cookery, or for tea and coffee. In Mr. Kirchofer's process the milk, fresh drawn from the cow, is placed in cans or bottles, which are filled as nearly full as possible, and immediately corked tightly, or hermetically sealed.

The cans or bottles are then placed in a bath of water, heated to the same temperature as the milk, in such a manner as to allow a free circulation of water beneath and around, but not over them. The temperature of the water bath is then slowly raised to between 160° and 170° Fahrenheit. The water is kept at this temperature for a greater or less length of time, according to the period during which it is desired to preserve the milk. One hour will, it is claimed, preserve the milk four or five weeks. Five hours' heating is enough for eight months or a year.

The fire is then withdrawn, and the bath allowed to cool down slowly, after which the cans are withdrawn and the operation is completed. An essential condition of success in this process is that the vessels designed to contain the milk should be perfectly clean and sweet, and the milk itself pure and unadulterated. If the temperature be raised above the degree indicated, the milk acquires a cooked taste.—New York Observer.

HOT ALUM-WATER is a recent suggestion as an insecticide. It will destroy red and black ants, cockroaches, spiders, chintz-bugs, and all the crawling pests which infest our homes. Take two pounds of alum and dissolve it in three or four quarts of boiling water; let it stand on the fire till the alum disappears; then apply it with a brush, while nearly boiling hot, to every joint and crevice in your closets, bedsteads, pantry shelves, and the like. Brush the crevices in the floor of the skirting or mop-boards, if you suspect that they harbor vermin. If, in whitewashing a ceiling, plenty of alum is added to the lime, it will also serve to keep insects at a distance. Cockroaches will flee the paint which has been washed in cool alum-water. Sugar barrels and boxes can be freed from ants by drawing a chalk line just around the edge of them. The mark must be unbroken, or they will creep over it; but a continuous chalk mark half an inch in width will set their depredations at naught. Powdered alum or borax will keep the chintz-bugs at a respectful distance; and travelers should always carry a package in their hand-bags, to scatter over and under their pillows in places where they have reason to suspect the presence of such bed-fellows.—The Journal of Chemistry.

BONE AS A MANURE.—The bones of all animal creation are composed of three substances, phosphoric acid, lime and gelatine or glue, three of the best fertilizing substances to produce good seed. But where do the bones of animals come from? Certainly from the soil, through the grass, hay, grain, etc., consumed as food. Therefore every horse, bullock, cow, sheep and hog sent off the farm without returning a like quantity of bone to the earth causes our land to yield less and less every year, till the land becomes what is termed worn out. Besides, every load of hay and every bushel of grain sold off the farm carries away the same material, as it is the hay and grain that make the bones of our cattle, horses, etc.

Five per cent. of all plants are composed of ten mineral substances, of which bone forms a large part, and which comes directly from the earth, while the fat of animals is composed of carbon, oxygen and hydrogen, three of the gases that plants take exclusively from the air, in the forms of carbonic acid and water, and which constitute about ninety-four per cent. of all plants.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

COTTON SEED MEAL.—There is a great diversity of opinion regarding the relative value of cotton seed meal for feeding to stock. Some of the most observing experimenters have fed it at times, but do not continue its use because they say that, when they do feed it, their cattle are not as uniformly healthy as when they have other kinds of grain. On the other hand, we know of others who have fed it very freely for many years without discovering any ill effects whatever from its use. Our own experience with cotton seed meal for milch cows has been satisfactory when fed at the rate of two quarts of it daily, mixed with four quarts of wheat bran. We consider it perfectly safe, and a valuable feed given in that quantity and proportion to either milch cows or oxen, although for oxen we would prefer giving part corn meal, instead of the four quarts of bran.—New England Farmer.

LONG LAMP WICKS.—Cram all the wick you can—that is, make your wick as long as you can—in your lamp, fill up the spaces with sponge, and then pour in the kerosene or coal oil, until the wick and sponge are filled, and the lamp will hold no more. As long as any oil remains in the wick or sponge the lamp will burn. This makes a fireproof or safety lamp. If your lamp is broken, or tipped over, no accident can happen, nor will it soil the carpet or even a table cover. As the wick burns away, add more sponge, and keep the lamp full of it.

NEVER strike a colt when you are breaking him. Push him sidewise or any way. Let him go just where he will and how he will. Let him fall down if he will, but don't strike him.

RENOVATING BITTERS!!

Purify the Blood.

STRENGTHEN, INVIGORATE AND RENOVATE SYSTEM.

One of the best remedies known for the speedy cure of

DYSPEPSIA,

Loss of Appetite, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Heartburn, Nausea, Fluttering of the Heart, Fainting Sensations, Sudden Flashes of Heat, Depression of Spirits or Melancholy, Water Brash, and Chronic or Nervous Debility. They are Diuretic, Tonic, Alterative and Stimulant. They perfectly eradicate all Bilious disorders arising from a foul stomach, strengthening the system and regulating the functions of the Liver.

Any one suffering with Weak Nerves, Deranged Liver, Kidney Complaint, Loss of Appetite, Fever and Ague, or any of the diseases or symptoms enumerated above, can be materially benefited and entirely cured by the use of these Bitters.

FOR FEMALES.

It is an established fact that fully one-half of the females are in bad health; or, in other words, never feel well. Many suffer with inward weakness. They feel languid, devoid of energy, extremely nervous, and have no appetite. To this class the Renovating Bitters are especially recommended. Such patients should resort to the use of these Bitters, the invariable result of which will be a strong and healthy constitution, a disappearance of all nervousness, a good appetite and a perfect restoration to health.

Thousands have testified to the merits of these Bitters. I would strongly advise all suffering with the above-named complaints to try them and be convinced.

Full directions accompany each bottle. Price, $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.

Scientific.

MR. A. S. WILSON, who some time distinguished himself by proving that the seed of Lolium temulentum, or Darnel grass, was entirely harmless, though for many hundred years it had been charged with communicating a poisonous principle to wheat flour, contributes a very interesting article to the proceedings of the Botanical Society of Edinburg (February 10) on the fertilization of the grasses, in which he places beyond doubt the fact that in oats, wheat, rye and barley fertilization does take place before the flower opens. The process of fertilization, he says, may be accelerated by art; and the growth of the stamens, opening of the flower and discharge of the pollen is one of the most beautiful phenomena in nature, and can be readily seen by good eyes without the aid of the microscope. When the flower is mature, handling the grass-spike causes the valves of the flower to open. He says he has seen eleven rye florets throw out their bright yellow anthers at one and the same time by simply drawing the spike through the hand. Bringing a cut spike into a warm room has the same effect. The force used in opening is considerable. He has seen a floret from the common Darnel grass held apart from the rachis by a tension which counterbalances one hundred and ten grains. When the flower is ready for fertilization the stamens grow with tremendous rapidity. In a barley floret they grow so fast that if the growth was continued at the same rate for an hour the stamens would be six inches long. As soon, however, as they have risen half way up the little green cups which constitute the flower, the anthers burst, and the pollen is scattered in every direction. The whole article is extremely interesting. As "grass" is such an extensive idea, and affords such a great number of species, many of which are unknown in England, our American observers may have a great field for discovery before them the present season, as it is not at all likely that the behavior of any two species is, in respect to the manner of growth and fertilization, exactly the same.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Mississippi river and bayous	23,379
Red river	1,073
Ouachita river	1,385
Railroads	13,131
Lake	74
Mobile	4,009
Texas	792
Total	43,853

On Saturday, although no dispatches were received from either Liverpool or New York, the holiday being continued in both markets, the movement commenced with considerable spirit, and 2,000 bales changed hands during the morning, partly at previous rates and partly at an advance of ⅛c., after which buyers came forward with increased spirit and took 5,500 bales more, making a total for the day of 7,500 bales, at a pretty general improvement on the grades from good ordinary to strict middling inclusive. On Monday the business was confined to 4,900 bales. During the morning the advantage was decidedly in favor of the factors, but toward noon, in order to keep up the movement, it became necessary to meet the demand more freely, and in some cases buyers obtained concessions of ⅛c. On Tuesday the business during the morning was of limited extent, and while in some cases the prices paid showed an advance of ⅛c., in others they indicated an improvement. Later in the day the demand was met more freely, and the movement exhibited increased animation, but the advantage was still less on the side of the seller, and in some cases buyers obtained slight concessions, offers being accepted which had been previously refused. The entire sales summed up 5,600 bales. Middling sold at 14⅜, 14⅝@14⅞c., the last for high style, and strict middling at 14⅛@14⅜c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 18,000 bales, against 17,300 for the corresponding time last week and 19,850 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 535,232 bales, against 532,147 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 263,889 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 181,981 bales to Great Britain, of 21,093 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 26,847 to France. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year to want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.
